

School 'pamphlet' scored for shallowness

MLAs from all three opposition parties attacked Education Minister Eileen Dailly's white paper this week, calling it everything from "disappointing" to "pathetic".

"This five-page pamphlet to me is just a pathetic apology for a white paper on education," said Progressive Conservative leader Scott Wallace. "I expected a document in much greater depth, with more specific direction."

"I can't believe it's the white paper," said Socred MLA Harvey Schroeder. "It gives no direction at all; it speaks in generalities."

Liberal MLA Gordon Gibson said the white paper, tabled in the legislature Wednesday, puts the province back at square one in terms of educational change. He called it "one of the most disappointing things that have happened in B.C. education". The "slim little piece of paper" provides no answers or ideas to deal with the problems of education in the province, said Gibson.

A Vancouver education critic, Don Wood of the citizens' committee on education, put it another way: "Mrs. Dailly deserves the comet Kohoutek award for the non-event of the month."

The five-page document, entitled The Public School System: Directions for Change, outlines five major areas where educational change is needed:

—Redistribution of authority and responsibility in the school system to recognize the central relationship must be between the teacher, the student and parents.

—Shared responsibility in developing programs and flexibility in program development so that needs of different children are met.

—Opportunity for suitable education should be provided to all children.

—Change in administrative organization, with a possible combining of some duties now done by each of the province's 74 school boards.

—A revamped educational finance system.

The five points outlined will be the basis of discussion in study groups which will be set up, Dailly said. Dailly herself and deputy education minister Jack Fleming will lead the public discussion.

"The study groups will be charged with the responsibility of issuing regular public statements so that the public at large can be kept informed," said the white paper.

Jim MacFarlan, president of B.C. Teachers' Federation, said the white paper takes the province back to where it was a year ago, when John Bremer was appointed education commissioner.

MacFarlan said he thought Dailly was having a second try at prompting public discussion about education, a discussion that never materialized under Bremer.

FIVE-LEAF CLOVER, in a marine version, is one of two $200,000 five-blade propellers brought from Sweden for the 970-foot American container ship Sealand Galloway, undergoing a refit by Yarrow Shipyard workers. The new propellers will replace two six-blade propellers used on the ship. Cruising at 23 knots, the Sealand Galloway makes her normal run from San Francisco to Hong Kong in six days.

No merger of papers, Victoria Press decides

Victoria Press has backed down from its threat to merge the city's two daily newspapers when the current dispute ends.

General manager Jack Melville said in an interview that he was bowing to public pressure in making that decision, although a study had shown that such a merger could bring considerable economic benefits to the company.

"When we made our first announcement of merger in January," said Melville, "we said we would do a very close, in-depth study and we have done this as best we could, although there are still some imponderables."

"We can see considerable savings, but there has been a considerable reaction from many different sources."

In addition, said Melville, the decision to give up papers which are 115 and 85 years old cannot be done without a great deal of soul searching, and the matter has now been put aside.

"We have decided to stay with two papers," he said.

The decision was welcomed, but without surprise, by Len Guy, spokesman for the Joint Council of Newspaper Unions, which negotiates on behalf of the five Victoria Press unions.

"We considered it a threat to see if union members could be upset in the first place," he said.

"I think he backed down when we made it clear that we want job security for all, no matter what decisions they might make about the way they want to run the papers."

Melville also said the company has softened its position on job security for employees to the extent that it is prepared to guarantee the jobs of all employees who were on staff on Nov. 30, when the pressmen struck the plant.

However, he added, this job guarantee applied only to technological change in the composing room and stereotyping department, where the company is moving to new processes.

It did not apply specifically in other departments where the company is not planning to bring in new equipment.

If new equipment were to be introduced, he said, the company would notify the union in advance, and negotiate on the matter.

Melville said that, while the company wants to reserve the right to negotiate in this matter, it would honor its first undertaking to give job security to present employees.

The real stumbling block to agreement in the dispute, Melville claimed, was that the company wants to approach the matter by acknowledging an obligation to people, while the union wants to talk about positions.

He said the company was prepared to await staff cuts through attrition, but was not prepared to consider protection of job opportunities.

Any profits from staff cuts would go directly to the company, he said.

Guy said such a policy would mean that it would be to the company's advantage to pressure employees to leave, either by offering cash settlements or by harsh working conditions.

The union is determined, said Guy, to allow only a set number of jobs to go through attrition.

After that point is reached, any savings should be used to improve job opportunities through such means as putting employees on a four-day work week or by giving increased holidays.

"Employees who have devoted long years to this company, who have made profits for the company, deserve to share in the profits of increased productivity in the future," said Guy.

"It's greedy for someone to decide to take all of the profits and to destroy job opportunities in a community. If all companies thought this way, there would be a decreasing number of jobs, and ultimately no wage earners to buy products."

Guy said that while Melville's job security offer looks good on the surface, it contains hooks.

The technological change clause applied really only to the departments moving to cold type—two of the five unions.

There would be no job security for members of the three other unions.

Melville also said that the job security guarantee, which was made on the last day of a recent bargaining session, would not apply should the company decide to merge various departments within the newspaper operation.

This issue would be subject to negotiation as an item to be separated from technological change.

He said the company also reserves the right to make any economic lay-offs it considers necessary.

Guy said such a position was unacceptable.

"The company would simply have to say that they were making economic lay-offs, and our job security would be right out the window," he said.

"The unions would have to go to arbitration and try to prove that the staff cuts were the result of technological change, and this could be a fine line to prove."

The only guarantees that have actually been made to date have been for changes to cold type. "Everything else he has offered has had hooks in it."

Fistful of parking tickets ring up to $417.50 fine

A Victoria woman who pleaded guilty to 34 minor traffic violations between July 30 of last year and Feb. 2 was fined a total of $417.50 this week in Victoria provincial court.

It was one of the largest totals of accumulated tickets to come before the court's traffic section in recent years.

Bette Huget, 1323 Coventry, pleaded guilty to 31 meter violations and one charge each of no valid sticker, a yellow curb violation and a general loading zone infraction.

She told Judge Edmond Jorre de St. Jorre she had been ill and had loaned her car to a friend. The judge described the friend as "a scoundrel" for leaving her with the tickets as the car owner.

Court officials added the penalties to reach a total of $417.50 or, in default, 103 days in jail. Mrs. Huget was allowed by the judge to pay $100 a month starting April 1.

Tickets by June

B.C.'s participation in a Western Lottery that also involves Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba has been announced by Provincial Secretary Ernie Hall.

Hall told reporters that tickets would go on sale in June and the first draw would be held in October. After that, four draws a year will be held.

The charge for a shallow (6 ft.) grave, "new or reopened," goes up from $65 to $105.

But interment of ashes will cost less, with the proposed fee dropping by $2 to $15.

The existing Manitoba lottery, the Golden Boy Sweepstakes, Hall said, would initially serve as an administrative base for the new combined scheme, but would later be phased out.

Hall said he couldn't give details of the price of tickets, but added that the first prize to be paid out would be "at least $100,000."

Hall's comments came following the introduction in the B.C. legislature of the Lotteries Act which not only gives the government the power to participate in the Western Lottery scheme, but also to permit a limited number of private lotteries in B.C.

Under the act, the government will appoint a Lotteries Advisory Committee to oversee the lottery function.

Ross Bay Cemetery dying?

Declining use and rising labor costs may signal the demise of Victoria's historic Ross Bay Cemetery.

But if city council decides on closure, the policy will take at least 20 years to implement because of long-term burial agreements that have to be phased out.

Meanwhile, city parks committee has recommended increases in the schedule of burial fees—unchanged since 1969—to reflect increased labor charges and other inflationary factors.

Interment in a deep 7 ft. 6 in. grave this year will cost $150, an increase of $38, and no more burials of this kind will be permitted after Jan. 1, 1975.

Tourist buses all B.C.'s

Tweed Line Tours Ltd., the last remaining private sightseeing bus company in Greater Victoria, has been purchased by Vancouver Island Coach Lines Ltd. which in turn, will be taken over by the provincial government.

The latest transaction will make the provincial government the sole operator of sightseeing buses in Greater Victoria.

Tweed Line operates four double-decker buses which have already been turned over to Vancouver Island Coach Lines. Another four are on order in London, England, and Municipal Affairs Minister James Lorimer expects the provincial government will take delivery of them.

In an interview, Lorimer said he hadn't been aware of the transfer of Tweed Line to Vancouver Island Coach Lines, but confirmed that it would only be a matter of a month or so before the province completes its agreement to purchase of VICL.

He said tourist buses are "a lucrative business," helping to offset the deficit incurred by B.C. Hydro's passenger bus service.

He said he couldn't say anything about the price of Tweed because the two firms

COLUMNIST'S CORNER

About once every couple of weeks I set aside a day — this being it — for the processing and return shipment of poetry.

You just wouldn't believe how many poets we have in these parts or how many, seeking an audience or a judgment, nominate your correspondent.

This puts a heavy responsibility on a man. Good or bad, poets almost always express some private thought and, being trusted with this, you just can't toss it lightly aside as you might some less personal correspondence.

You can't, anyway, because poets never give up. A good many of the stanzas that arrive on my Express desk have been submitted first to various editorial people, politely and properly rejected and immediately sent to this department as an appeal from the original verdict.

I have, as a result, evolved a form of reply carefully designed to avoid any opinion on the merits of the verse because I have found that amateur poets are very easily wounded and I'd no more criticize their rhymes than I would criticize their baby pictures.

The subject was brought up recently in the column of Sidney Harris, the widely syndicated Chicagoan whose low-key, philosophical writing I generally enjoy, but who turned ugly in dealing with the bars.

"Practically anybody who can arrange alphabet blocks to spell c-a-t thinks he is an embryonic poet," Mr. Harris wrote. "I have learned through bitter experience never to suggest that their literary efforts stink, which they do. Only God can make a tree, but any fool thinks he can write a passable poem."

"The dunderheads who bombard editorial offices with their hideous hexameters forget — if they ever knew — that poetry is a craft before it is an art and that a skilled poet requires as much training and preparation as a journeyman plumber or carpenter."

"You can no more write by sheer inspiration than you can fix a leaky faucet by inspiration."

You can't ignore poets, they never give up

End of Mr. Harris. Well, now, there may be a bit of truth in this unkind blast, but it also seems to me a waste of energy to get mad at poets. It is like complaining about people whistling on the street or yodelling in the bathtub.

Amateur poetry, it seems to me, is something special. It does not seriously pretend to be craftsmanship. The writer does not submit it in the hope of payment or fame, but simply because he hasn't anything better to do with it.

It must be remembered that anyone who has been embraced by the Muse has no way of knowing he has given birth to a monster. It looks exquisite to him, blinded as he is by the bitter-sweet joy of creation and so he sends it off to the editor — or to me — and that is the end of it for him.

All he asks is that it be read and that he may get back an encouraging word — for which he never, never encloses a self-addressed envelope — and who can be mad at that?

What Mr. Harris has completely overlooked is that while the poetry may be terrible, and usually is, the motivation for it is a shining, wonderful thing and should be rewarded.

These "dunderheads" and their vile verse are struggling to express some personal conception of beauty, trying to pin down a transient emotion or some imagined glimpse of the deeper meaning of life.

Often they are groping painfully to put down in words something mysterious and lovely, striving to pass on the feeling of being suddenly aware of truth.

They flop horribly, of course. As Mr. Harris says, inspiration isn't enough. Earnestness isn't enough. The more you work with words the more you're aware of their limitations and their obstinacy.

But it's the trying that counts. For so long as a large number of people are moved by that lofty desire to express themselves, and so to understand a little better the joy and sorrow of life, then all is not lost.

Dear Sir:

A word and nod of appreciation and continued support for Premier Barrett and his colleagues, particularly in the face of recent large apartment owners' criticism.

I was frankly perplexed, then disgusted, at recent statements made by certain of these owners. I refer particularly to that Babbitt-like person on the CBC-TV news the other night who indicated he was "now building in California" and the realtor who was now "going to throw the entire responsibility for providing rental accommodation upon the provincial government's doorstep."

Realizing that we now have a provincial government sensitive to the public mood, this group and others (e.g. the mining concerns) are employing a well-used pressure tool, that being that extreme statements continued loudly and long enough just may effect enough changes to make any substantial consumer-orientated program inoperable.

—Eugene Obrigewitsch

Dear Sir:

First, you and your associates are to be commended for jumping into the breach and producing a readable newspaper when the two Victoria dailies ceased publication.

I would like to comment on the article, "Dog Food is Good For You," in the March 16 Express. So are many other unpalatable things, castor oil heading the list.

A year or so ago, appreciating that some poor people (particularly those pensioned and living alone) could no longer meet the cost of normal food and priding myself on public-spiritedness, I purchased a few kinds of dog food to determine just how palatable they were. A few mouthfuls sufficed.

Thereupon, I wrote to various cereal companies suggesting that a bonanza awaited the first manufacturer who produced something along the lines of "Grapenuts" or some such, with a meat content or flavor. Doubtless those too poor to pay the outrageous prices for meat — (even beef liver today costs around $1 per lb.) — may be able or are forced to stomach dog food. Fortunately, I personally, although somewhat bent, am not that broke.

The cereal makers apparently failed to envision the market of my offered suggestion. "Let them eat cake," I hear them say. But breeding precludes my suggesting what they should eat.

Maps of B.C. hit the road

Cases of B.C.'s 1974-75 official road map are now on their way to every corner of the world.

The map, which cost more than $95,000 to produce the 1.25 million copies, is put out by the provincial Department of Travel Industry and is distributed to such places as Tasmania, Lebanon, South Africa and the Netherlands.

The map is started on in July, goes to the printers in December or January and finally rolls off the presses in the early Spring.

It is revised every year to show new blacktopped highways and rough roads that have been gravelled during the year.

It also lists all provincial campgrounds and their facilities.

More than 250,000 maps are sent out by the travel department to individuals who write in to ask for information on B.C.

About 2,000 maps are sent out to the North American Truckers' Association for inclusion in a truckers' manual which has maps of every province and state on the continent.

All automobile associations in Canada and the U.S. receive a shipment of the maps. Four cases are sent to B.C. House in London, England and 85 cases go to the federal government's travel department.

All of the 130 tourist information centres in B.C. get a load of maps and all are given away free of charge.

Dear Sir:

We would appreciate it if your newspaper could render us any assistance in publicizing the value of civic pride vis a vis litter, encouraging people to show love of city by not littering, perhaps even to pick up other people's litter.

Much can be gained with so little effort on each individual's part to make Victoria, our community, a lovely place to live and walk in.

Opinion

The following is one of a series of articles of personal opinion by an Express Staff writer. The views expressed are those of the writers and not necessarily of Pugstem Publications or other Express staff members.

If the role of the Opposition in our parliamentary system is to criticize government policy intelligently, to offer the voters alternatives, to point out dangers inherent in new legislation, then the people of British Columbia are served very poorly.

The greatest potential danger of bureaucratic abuse, and everbearing government fancying itself as the protector of "the little man", is hidden in the still small consumer services department, established by the NDP government.

The risk is not in the government's intention to give consumers a break in their unequal battle with corporate giants. Many dubious trade practices need to be curbed and the only way to accomplish that is perhaps by strong legislation.

The danger is that the government, and not necessarily this one, will go overboard and feel compelled to protect the consumer beyond a reasonable point.

A person should be permitted to make mistakes lest he become completely helpless. The accumulation of mistakes and lessons learned from them is called experience, a necessary ingredient of the intelligent human.

What has been the Opposition's role in the debate on the estimates of a department that may eventually turn B.C. consumers into a flock of sheep, unable to wander astray because Big Brother government will protect them from all big and small pitfalls?

The Opposition played politics. What, they asked, was the minister (Phyllis Young) going to do about the government's resolve not to pay interest on overcharges collected from motorists under the Autoplan insurance scheme?

Was the minister prepared, they wanted to know, to look into the government's activities in the market place? Embarrass the government is the name of the game played by the Opposition. They're even doing a bad job of that, but more important, they are missing the real issues.

Legislation dealing with trade practices in B.C. will be introduced later in the session. It is bound to be drastic, considering the NDP's commitment to the "man on the street" and considering the calibre of the deputy minister of consumer services — Bill Neilson.

The only MLA who touched on the potential hazards of the consumer services department was Scott Wallace (PC—Oak Bay).

"I shudder to think about the kind of society we may be building where Big Brother government takes us all by the hand like children just to protect a small minority from their own stupidity," Wallace said.

Veteran policeman dies

A funeral service was held Wednesday for Fearon Woodburn, a member of Victoria police department for 33 years, who died Sunday aged 82.

Woodburn, of 847 Victoria Ave., was a detective when he retired from the force in 1951.

He is survived by three sons, Daryl, of Victoria; Raymond, of Vancouver and Clyde of Nanaimo; two daughters, Miss Darlene Woodburn of Victoria, and Mrs. Joyce Harris of Vancouver; a brother, Cecil Mulholland of Nanaimo; 14 grandchildren and three great-grandchildren.

The service, at McCall Brothers Funeral Chapel, was followed by interment at Hatley Memorial Gardens.

Land-use contracts

City land-use contracts left dangling without the signature of either party should be a thing of the past if council approves a committee recommendation.

Council's land-use committee voted Tuesday to require developers taking out land-use contracts with the city to sign the contracts within a given time from the date council authorizes the deal.

As things stand now, a bylaw authorizing such a contract is passed after a public hearing and the developer is expected to execute the contract without undue delay.

However, some developers have held off signing on the dotted line until the last possible moment so as to be able to opt out if necessary.

A few have even used land-use contracts won from City Hall as a means of scouting around for attractive development offers.

Interest high in garden plots

Applications are already flooding into the department of agriculture following an announcement this week that allotment gardens will be made available in Saanich for $10 a year rent.

Agriculture Minister Dave Stupich said a pilot project will provide 50 garden plots covering about half of seven acres owned by the provincial government on a site across the street from Saanich municipal hall.

Individual plots are expected to be 750 square feet, but the minister said the size might be halved if there is a high demand for the vegetable gardens.

The land will be plowed next week, a department spokesman said, and sites should be ready for planting by May 1. Irrigation and some form of security will also be provided.

The land is a muck soil suitable for vegetable production.

Stupich said he is trying to make similar allotments available in Vancouver, but suitable sites are more difficult to find.

Northridge homeowners protest tax

A group of Northridge householders has organized to fight what they consider an arbitrary local improvement assessment imposed without their consent.

The homeowners are being assessed an additional $336 on their property — working out to a tax of about $34.22 a year for 20 years — for a six-lot parcel of land donated by the neighborhood's subdivider for municipal park.

Peter Montague, 4325 Northridge Crescent, a spokesman for the group, said he and several others occupying 40 homes of a proposed 140 being built by Engineered Homes Ltd. had made purchase agreements without being told of the local improvement assessment.

Montague said he had been in the subdivision for two years and was now being billed along with an eventual 134 property owners according to a local improvement agreement reached by the original developers, Lipsey-Rolston, and Saanich municipality.

That agreement provides for a six-lot parcel surrounding a swampy area that will be developed by Saanich into a park. The land was earmarked for building lots and had a 1972 market value of $45,068, which the developer considered too high to donate to Saanich.

Because the principals at that time constituted a sufficient majority to petition for local improvement, the application was approved and the responsibility carried over to Engineered Homes, Montague indicated.

A local improvement court

Rockland group formed

Emulating the example of James Bay, Victoria West and other distinctive neighborhoods in the city, residents of the exclusive Rockland district have formed their own community association.

Objectives of the recently established Rockland Area Association, according to a spokesman, are:

To maintain the present quality of the residential environment in the Rockland district; to encourage retention of existing large old residences and grounds by identifying compatible contemporary uses for the balance of their economic life; and to encourage planned development of the Rockland area consistent with its present traditional character.

Elected officers of the association are: president, Barney Hagar; vice-president, James Bexley; secretary-treasurer, Mrs. Doris Stastny; directors, Dermot Owen-Flood, Mrs. Nancy Tyrwhitt-Drake, John Graeme, George Forbes, Terry Farmer and Lewis Alexander.

Mayor Peter Pollen will be guest speaker at the next meeting of the association at 8 p.m. next Tuesday at the Victoria Art Gallery, 1040 Moss.

of revision will be held by Saanich March 26, and the group intends to present an argument at that time, Montague said.

He also said a legal committee struck by the group was investigating prospects for opposing the assessment and would explore a suggestion the land purchase contracts might be of interest to the attorney-general's department or the consumer affairs branch.

The group has asked for the support of Northridge Community Association, of which some are members.

More aldermen urged

The immediate addition of two members to Saanich council with perhaps an eventual doubling to 16 aldermen is advocated by Saanich Information Committee.

Gordon H. Campbell, president of the informal group founded about 15 years ago at the height of what has been called the "amalgamation controversy," said there is fear among the members of regionalism threatening municipal government.

One way of strengthening the municipal structure would be to involve more people in civic affairs by enlarging the size of council, he said.

Stressing that these were his personal views, Campbell said when asked how large a council might be, "off hand I'd say double it—the more people in it the better."

But for an immediate start, the addition of two members for a total of 10 plus the mayor, would be desirable, Campbell said.

Kangaroo fund hits snag

Boomers can't come

The Sidney Review's Save the Kangaroo Fund is trapped in an Australian legal snare. But the idea of importing kangaroos to Vancouver Island "can hardly be called a flop," said fund vice-president Stephen Brewer.

The fund was started last January by the Sidney Review, a weekly newspaper, after it was learned the Australian government intended to exterminate a million of the animals by putting arsenic in their water.

The fund is now up to $266—enough to import the first kangaroo—but the Australian government will not export them to Canada, Brewer said.

Animals exported from Australia must be raised in a zoo and sent directly to a Canadian zoo. The Canadian zoo must send a Canadian animal, "like a bunch of beavers," in exchange, he said.

The purpose of the fund, Brewer said, was to rescue wild animals.

The Western Canadian Wildlife Association, in North Saanich, has already built an enclosure with an eight-foot fence, arranged with Buckfield's for a special feed mix, and weatherproofed a barn. The association was expecting six kangaroos, he said, and Calgary Zoo has asked for two.

Although Brewer has asked the Australian government to make an exception and allow export of the animals, it's doubtful the kangaroo population in Sidney will change, he said.

The money will likely be returned to donors or sent to the Australian "Save the Kangaroo Committee" which is a branch of the world wildlife federation, said Brewer.

League to sell Rainbow

One of the last pieces of waterfront property in Victoria, used by sportsmen and community youth since the mid-'30s, will be sold to a developer.

The site, just over two acres, is owned by the Navy League of Canada and lies at the foot of Robert in Victoria West.

During the 1930s, members of James Bay Athletic Club built the main building as a centre for their oarsmen activities.

The Navy League bought the property in the 1940s for youth organizations. The original building still stands, aging and in need of renovation. A boathouse, bandhouse, rifle range and other amenities were added over the years.

Now, strapped for funds, the Navy League has put the property up for sale, unable to raise the money needed to keep things going.

In receipt of $5,000 option money, the Navy League has been promised $330,000 from Vancouver Island Development Corp. Ltd.

In turn, the company has a sale pending with developer Neil De Macedo.

De Macedo refuses to be specific about the price he paid other than to say it is "much higher" than that offered the Navy League.

De Macedo's plans for the site were considered at an in-camera session of the city's Advisory Planning Commission this week.

He told The Express he hopes to be able to build 38 condominium townhouses fronting on the waterfront and a three-storey frame apartment with 42 units, placed in such a way on the site that all apartment balconies would have a view of the sea.

De Macedo said he is willing to give a 15-foot strip easement to the city on the waterfront side.

Future plans of the city include making public access available in Victoria West as part of its harbor program.

Contacted before the in-camera meeting, Ald. Mike Young said city officials were sympathetic to the Navy League's position.

"We're sympathetic to the problem," he said. "They are land-rich and money-poor."

"The property is a very sensitive one," he said, "and very large. It's single-family zoned and we're not about to give away or concede a higher level of zoning. We'll have to be convinced we have control of the project before we'll go ahead."

Stressing that it would be up to council to approve any development, Young added, "I would be most concerned if it was being overdeveloped."

Young said the land, if developed under present zoning, was still extremely valuable and would yield a "substantial amount of revenue."

He continued: "We're not about to pass it over on a plate to somebody for double or triple profits without getting back some community benefit."

He explained, "We would retain control by retaining the present zoning until we are presented with something satisfactory."

Young said any increase in density granted would have to be reciprocated in community benefits such as green space, waterfront access and a "careful balance."

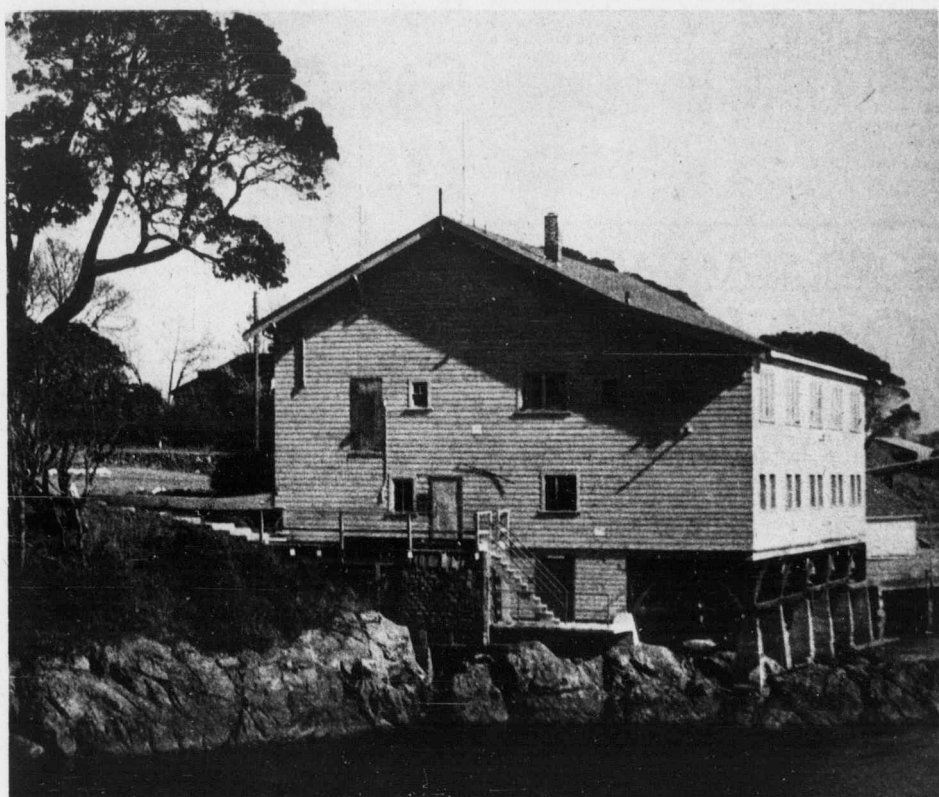

Young said the "city had expressed an interest in this property in the past" and had been willing to acquire part of the waterfront for a civic program.

He warned, however, the site was not on the city's parks priority list.

Asked if the city had considered buying the entire property, Young said he considered residential use of the land a good one.

He said any purchase of the land by the city would be "to help sea cadets" and ensure the site being developed in a manner acceptable to council.

George Stephens, Navy League president, said the decision to sell had been made after all other alternatives had been explored. Because of the age of the main building, he said, renovations would be extremely costly. Building a new headquarters, also, had been found to be out of the volunteer organization's financial reach.

Lack of funds forces sale of old site

Provincial library funds viewed with apprehension

Mayor Peter Pollen warned a delegation from the Greater Victoria Library Board this week not to become too "excited" over the proposed regionalization of library services, just because that would lead to substantial funding from the provincial government.

Pollen said he viewed the prospect with considerable "horror and apprehension," as the injection of large sums of provincial money into greater Victoria's library system could open the door to outside interference.

"The people who are going to give us this money are going to be formulating policy," he claimed. "It seems we are being led around by the nose here."

The mayor said he was not arguing that regionalization was an undesirable aim, but merely questioning the whole rationale for bringing the library system under the regional district umbrella.

Library director Donald Miller said he could understand Pollen's concerns, but pointed out that some kind of library board embodying full local representation would still administer the system when it came under regional jurisdiction.

"I don't think the administration of the library service would be any further removed than it is today," he said, in reply to Pollen's contention that the administrative level would be moved "one step away" from the people being served.

Miller echoed one of Pollen's own favorite themes when he said the biggest problem facing municipalities today stems from trying to finance all necessary services through property taxation. He said the provincial government had given a clear indication to library boards that regionalization would release provincial assistance — initially "very large" funding and, once the systems are established, grants representing at least 20 per cent of operating budgets.

The provincial grant to the GVLB this year for development of library services is $60,000. That, said city finance committee chairman Ald. Tom Christie, is "not very good."

Christie asked if any "fat" could be pared from the board's $1.3 million 1974 budget, but was told that any deletions would result in deferment of certain key projects and a general decline in service.

Defending the 16.3 per cent increase over last year's budget, board vice-chairman Gordon Hutcheson declared: "The municipalities through the board are receiving good service to the public at low cost."

The city's share of the budget has risen from $384,000 last year to $453,650. Finance committee referred consideration of the budget to full council, without recommendation.

Owen-Flood named Victoria Tory head

Lawyer Dermot Owen-Flood has been elected to head the new executive of Victoria Progressive Conservative Association, which includes several leading political figures in Greater Victoria.

Other officers elected at the recent annual meeting were Douglas Christie, first vice-president; Mrs. Margaret Richards, second vice-president; Michael Young, treasurer; and Peter Stanley, secretary.

Directors include Owen-Flood, Mrs. Richards, Stanley, Young, Mrs. Vera Ashford, Michael Hare, A. L. Watson, James Thornton and Ernest Gilpin. Ex-officio members are Mark Preston, Mrs. Edith Gunning and Clyde Savage.

Owen-Flood said MLA Scott Wallace will discuss the party's future at the next meeting at 8 p.m. May 15 in the War Amps Hall, 1610 Oak Bay.

Search for spirit bears fruit

A Victoria man says he has had the experience of witnessing the presence of the Holy Spirit.

He said it happened last weekend at the United Church Men's Christian Coastal Conference at The First in Bellingham, Wash.

The man is Charlie Shave. "It was awesome, indescribable, electrifying and yet there was a calmness, peace and gentleness," he said in an interview this week.

"I feel these adjectives are totally inadequate to describe the presence," he went on.

Shave said he had gone to the conference "searching."

"In fact, I have been searching for most of my life. I'm a very dogmatic person. I guess it's because of my news background."

Shave is a former CBC news editor and managing editor of the Alberni Valley Times in Port Alberni and now is a public information officer for the provincial government.

The first night of the conference, after the opening address by provincial archivist Willard Ireland, Shave attended a group discussion on the Holy Spirit where several men told of experiences they had had.

"I told the group that I wondered why nothing like this happens to me," Shave recalled. "I told them that I believe Christ died for me on the Cross. 'What gives?' I asked, but nobody had the answer."

Next morning, in another group, he asked the same question. He told his listeners that he had intellectual assent but no experience.

Willard Ireland was in the same group and they talked about religion in general.

After lunch, Shave went to his room and fell asleep.

"Upon waking," he reported, "I felt a presence in the room which was completely indescribable. I recall looking down at my folded hands and thinking how inadequate I am. I am nothing."

He described the presence, which wasn't visible, as "warm, gentle, peaceful, electrifying."

He dropped to his knees and said, very weakly, "I believe."

"At the same time, a surge of feeling went through my chest from shoulder to shoulder and the words 'I am here, if you will accept' just seemed to pass through me."

He went in search of Ireland and told him what he had experienced, adding that he felt people had been praying for him.

"There were," was the reply. "You had guts enough to state your need this morning and I prayed for you."

Shave said this week that a change has come over him. "I feel free, completely free. I am filled with rejoicing and gratitude. I no longer worry about material things such as a job or money. I'm sure there will be problems but I feel plugged into a power now which I can call on any time for help."

He told the assembled delegates to the conference of his experience. "If you had told me a month ago that I was to get up before about 70 men and tell them that, I would have sunk through the floor."

After he told his story, he asked Ireland just what he had prayed to the Holy Spirit on his behalf. The reply was: "You're not going to believe this, brother, but I simply asked Him to give you a good shaking up."

The change in Shave has not gone unnoticed at home, he said.

"My youngest daughter asked my wife 'How come everyone is so nice around here now. Daddy is much nicer.' She's five years old."

project. If it is approved, gas from Alaska and the Mackenzie River delta in the North West Territories will be piped south through the Mackenzie Valley primarily for export to the U.S.

The impact of the pipeline is expected to be widespread. Canadian Arctic Gas Pipeline Ltd. says it will solve all environmental problems and the line will be constructed in such a way as to do the least amount of damage to the ecology.

There is no indication as to how the venture will be financed but it is expected that the number of jobs in the region will double during construction.

The 48-inch pipe will have a capacity of more than 4½ billion cubic feet of gas a day, half owned by the U.S. and half by Canada.

There is no indication of how much Canadian gas will be exported to the U.S. and at what price.

GOV'T SCANDAL?

Old fishin' hole bared

OTTAWA — There's an exclusive fishing camp hidden away on a salmon river in Newfoundland, with red carpets in the tents and silver on the tables — and it's all paid for by the national defence department.

He asked Defence Minister James Richardson about it this week, saying he had heard that the camp was used by military, political and business officials, especially during the salmon run.

And he claimed the camp hides under the guise of a search and rescue unit installation.

Richardson refused comment on the charge and his secretary said he wanted time to study the allegations.

Rowland, who represents Selkirk for the NDP, said he had heard the camp has operated for several years and is staffed by 20 or 30 service "volunteers" including cooks, boat handlers, stewards and pilots who fly guests to the camp.

NAIROBI, Kenya — President Idi Amin of Kenya successfully talked a young Ethiopian into abandoning a hijack attempt on an East African Airways plane. Amin was able to soothe the hijacker, identified by the name of Kasete, who said he was protesting against the 3,000-year "slavery" suffered by his people under Emperor Haile Selassie.

Fuel costs could ground the Concorde for good PARIS — Soaring fuel costs are threatening to put the Concorde in mothballs for good.

The droop-nosed British-French supersonic airliner has been a white elephant since its conception in 1962 and now buyer disinterest has prompted the French to propose a cutback in production to four or five planes a year.

That's about half the production schedule Concorde was supposed to have reached several months ago.

Sixteen Concorde's are on the assembly line but only nine have been sold, the only buyers being Air France and British Airways. The world's other airlines have cancelled their options to buy.

What went wrong?

Expected to be a first-class-only plane, the Concorde will carry only about 108 passengers and burns two or three times the fuel of a conventional jet.

Moreover, the high-speed plane emits an ear-splitting roar on takeoff and poses the same theoretical threat to the stratosphere that helped kill the American supersonic transport.

Its range is less than 4,000 miles, making trans-Atlantic flights possible from London or Paris but eliminating longer non-stop flights from Tokyo, Rome, Frankfurt or Sydney.

The only thing going for Concorde is its speed. At twice the speed of sound, the plane can cross the Atlantic in about half the time of conventional airliners.

But in these days of fuel shortages and big flight payoffs, speed isn't enough to offset Concorde's obvious shortcomings.

In an effort to increase the plane's range, France has proposed the addition of more fuel tanks. But Lufthansa, one of the airlines which was supposed to have rekindled interest because of the modification, remains unimpressed.

"The possibilities of improving the aircraft are very limited," says Reinhard Abrahams, Lufthansa's technical director. "If Concorde was not dead in the last year, it was definitely killed by the rapid expansion of fuel prices."

Unless some buyers turn up, neither Britain nor France can afford to keep on building Concorde's. Development costs, shared by the two countries, have ballooned from $360 million when the project started to a total of nearly $3 billion.

Even more money must be spent on improvements but neither France nor Britain is keen on the idea. Economic problems and the recent election have all but forced Britain to forget it.

Ironically, the British government may have to stick with the Concorde. Trade union opposition to a pullout could prevent scrapping of the plane.

But without some new buyers, the end is in sight.

Palestinian rights seen vital to peace

GENEVA, Switzerland — The Palestinians should be guaranteed official status on all levels and formal opportunity to express their view freely about their future, according to the World Council of Churches.

A statement on the Middle East, issued by the executive committee of the council at the conclusion of a five-day meeting in Bad Saarow, stated: "To achieve lasting peace with justice in the Middle East it is imperative to assert the legitimate rights of the Palestinians and to urge the immediate implementation of these rights." The statement recalled that the council's central committee in 1969 stressed the need for "both redressing the injustice done to the Palestinian people as well as providing guarantees for the existence of the state of Israel in the context of the implementation of the appropriate United Nations resolution."

Noting that current negotiations have given new hope for resolving the conflicts in the Middle East, the committee said "it is of the first importance that the rights of the Israeli Jews and the implementation of the rights of the Palestinians should not lead to injustice to either people."

On the holy places in Jerusalem, the committee noted that most of them belong to member churches of the world council, specifically the Eastern Orthodox and the Oriental Orthodox.

It requested Dr. Philip Potter, general secretary, to investigate "problems that might develop in regard to the future control of these places as a result of international negotiations in the Middle East."

The executive committee also called attention to the world food crisis as a matter of urgent and grave concern to the churches.

"Without some cutback in the rate of consumption of both food and energy by the rich everywhere with a view to the fairer distribution of the world's resources among the human family, the poor will face increasing misery," the committee said.

'HEY, THAT'S MY CAR'

KEY LARGO, Fla. — Sheriff's Deputy Al Lankin got a surprise when he closed in on a speeding car: It was his own.

"Hey, I'm in pursuit of my own car!" he shouted into his police radio.

After a chase that topped 80 mph at times, Lankin forced the speeder to pull over.

The officer then asked the driver if it was his own car and was told no, it belonged to a friend.

"I'd have sworn this was Al Lankin's car," said the officer. "That's right," said the speeder. "Good old buddy Al lent us his car."

That's when Lankin showed him his breast pocket nameplate.

BRIEFLY:

Inflation gallops across the nation

OTTAWA — Inflation is galloping at the rate of at least 10 per cent in at least four Canadian cities, Statistics Canada reports, and two other cities are crowding close to that mark.

Leading the inflation parade is St. John's, Nfld., with an 11.7 per cent increase in the past 12 months, followed by Ottawa (10.6), Quebec City (10.4) and Saint John, N.B. (10).

Nearing the 10 per cent figure are Vancouver (9.8) and Montreal (9.7).

Another meeting on oil

OTTAWA — The 10 provincial premiers will meet here Wednesday with Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau to discuss oil pricing policy after April 1, when the freeze on Western oil is to be removed.

Western oil prices were frozen at $4 a barrel Feb. 1 and under a formula worked out at the January federal-provincial energy conference, the new national price will be below prevailing world prices.

Cancer claims Chet Huntley

BOZEMAN, Mont. — Former newscaster Chet Huntley of the NBC-TV Huntley-Brinkley team has died at 62 of lung cancer. Huntley resigned from NBC in 1970 to develop a ski and holiday resort in Montana. He was being treated for cancer for some time and underwent surgery earlier this year.

Huge blaze in Fredericton

FREDERICTON — Fire raged for more than eight hours through the downtown area of this city Tuesday, causing several million dollars damage and destroying retail outlets, business and professional offices and a number of apartments. More than 60 persons were forced to flee second- and third-storey apartments, but no injuries were reported.

No bread famine — bakers

WASHINGTON — Dire warnings that the U.S. would suffer from a bread famine this spring have now been cancelled by bakery association officials.

Robert Wager, president of the American Bakers' Association, said there may be a few scattered areas of shortage but the general picture had brightened considerably in recent weeks.

Earlier, the association had charged that the U.S. government was underestimating exports to the extent that the country would run out of wheat before the 1974 crop was harvested.

Beef chaos settles down

CALGARY — The chaos in beef cattle trading, which began Tuesday over government beef price policies, eased at the end of the week with enough cattle sold to establish a price. Fat steers were going for $52.50. Considering the $7 government subsidy, producers were expected to make a profit of about $4 a head.

More security demanded

LONDON — The ease with which a gunman was able to trace the movements of Princess Anne and her husband, Capt. Mark Phillips, in an abortive kidnap attempt is being questioned by London newspapers with demands for tighter security. The royal couple escaped a barrage of bullets Wednesday night while returning to their home from a private film showing.

The kidnap attempt was made on the Mall, barely 300 yards from Buckingham Palace, and British newspapers are questioning how the couple's assailant knew they had planned to stop off at the Palace on their way to Sandhurst, where Phillips is an instructor in the armed forces.

A 26-year-old unemployed London man, meanwhile, has been remanded in custody on a charge of attempted murder in the kidnap attempt and police Thursday began an extensive search for his associates.

Ian Ball was remanded in custody until March 28 on a charge of attempted murder of the princess's bodyguard, Insp. James Beaton.

The princess, her husband, Capt. Mark Phillips, and a lady-in-waiting, Rowena Brasse, were unhurt in the shooting. But wounded along with Beaton were the royal couple's chauffeur, an unarmed policeman who rushed to the scene and a newspaper reporter riding in a taxi.

Beaton, the policeman and the bodyguard were listed in serious condition by hospital officials Thursday.

The royal couple huddled in the back of their limousine after a gunman forced the vehicle to a halt by cutting in front of it.

The limousine was peppered with bullets and Beaton returned fire before he was hit.

"We are very thankful to be in one piece," said Anne, "but we are deeply concerned about those who got injured."

Home Secretary Roy Jenkins later told a startled House of Commons that the shooting was an attempt to kidnap the couple and hold them for ransom.

And Edward Short, government house leader, said in a radio broadcast that he saw a kidnap letter addressed to the Queen.

The letter was reported found in Ball's pocket but Scotland Yard refused to discuss it. Newspaper reports, however, said the note demanded a ransom of one million pounds and contained ravings about alleged injustices. It bore no name or address, according to the Daily Mail.

Police did not believe the man was politically motivated.

Eyewitness Sandy Scott, who said she was driving down the mall about 600 feet from Buckingham Palace, said six shots were pumped into the limousine. She said she saw Phillips in the limousine with his arms around Anne. "Capt. Phillips seemed to be shielding Anne with his body," she said.

"While I was crouching on one side of the car," Miss Scott said, "the gunman was trying to force open a door on the other side. The princess and her husband then jumped out of the car and the gunman was just shaking the door and trying to get in."

The wounded reporter was identified as Brian McConnell, 46, of the London Sun. He had published a book four years ago entitled Assassination.

From Ottawa, Prime Minister Trudeau sent a message to the Queen expressing shock and sympathy. And in San Diego, the U.S. Navy increased security around the naval base where Prince Charles' ship is docked.

WEST VANCOUVER — The Medal of Bravery is being awarded to a West Vancouver teacher for rescuing a child from a house fire in September, 1972.

Tom O'Neill saw smoke billowing from a house as he was driving by with his daughter. He sent his daughter to call the fire department and entered the house.

Driven back by smoke, he obtained a wet towel and re-entered the house, found a three-year-old child and carried her to safety. He then helped firemen rescue a younger child. Parents of the children died in the blaze.

At death's door, youth survives

EDMONTON — Sixteen-year-old Tommy Tomkins is recovering in hospital after a close brush with death while working on his sawmill job at Enilda, 170 miles northwest of here.

A yard-long piece of two-by-four snapped into his shoulder and emerged from his back. It missed vital organs, including the heart.

Tommy was so sure he was at death's door he asked his brother to say goodbye to his parents for him.

A 10-hour ambulance trip with the piece of wood still stuck through his body was necessary to reach Edmonton University Hospital. Now, two weeks later, doctors say he soon will be completely recovered.

Surgical foulup

CHRISTCHURCH, N.Z. — A 29-year-old man who entered hospital for removal of a cyst from his hand instead underwent a vasectomy. John Howard Churton is suing the hospital for $50,000 on grounds the operation has left him sterile.

VANCOUVER — Former MP Pauline Jewett has been chosen president of Simon Fraser University. Dr. Jewett, 51, will assume the post Sept. 1. She is a political science teacher at Carleton University in Ottawa. She will receive $50,000 a year on a five-year contract, with a one-year sabbatical leave on full pay.

NATIONAL CHAMPS

NEW CHAMPIONS of Canadian senior women's curling are (top to bottom) Flora Martin, Edna Messum, Doreen Baker and Betty Stubbs, who are scheduled to receive rousing welcome from other Victoria Curling Club members when they arrive at airport at 11:20 tonight from national final at Halifax. Skipped by Mrs. Martin, rink clinched title with 11-2 rout of Ontario Thursday after trimming Saskatchewan 11-3 and whipping Newfoundland 14-7 in Wednesday matches. Triumph over Ontario gave B.C. quartet 7-1 record with one game to play and all other rinks having at least three defeats.

Big chap ruins Rams

VANCOUVER — "No. 2 had nothing to do with it," stated Dale Bate, effectively shielding the frustration and disappointment that had to be there.

"We weren't aggressive enough. We're not really eager to get the ball," continued the Mt. Douglas Rams' coach to a larger-than-usual cluster of reporters.

The cluster was bigger than normal, because Bate's Rams were first-round losers Wednesday in the 29th annual B.C. high school boys basketball championship at Pacific Coliseum.

Tourney starts Wednesday

Eight teams, including host Juan de Fuca Gulls and Vancouver Island-champion Port Alberni, will square off in the round-robin B.C. midget hockey championship tournament starting Wednesday at Juan de Fuca Arena.

Other teams in the tourney represent six mainland districts—Peace River, Northern Yukon, East Kootenay, Lower Mainland, West Kootenay and Okanagan Mainline.

Games start at 6 a.m. each day and the tourney continues through Saturday.

The Rams were rated second in the 16-team tourney, behind defending-champion Oak Bay Bays.

But Kamloops Red Devils, ranked No. 3 (Bays and Rams were tied for the No. 1 seeding in the poll of coaches), wrecked the hopes of an all-Victoria final tonight by sinking the Rams, 78-65, in the opening game of the four-day tournament.

Rams contained six-foot-11 Al Chapple in the first half but the big centre came up with a good second half and a game-turning block with two minutes and 20 seconds remaining to turn the result in Kamloops' favor.

The 18-year-old finished with 22 points, but it was forward Doug Tidball, 22 points, and Kevin Powell, 18, who did most of the early damage to Bate's club.

Tidball shot 80 per cent in the opening 20 minutes, getting 16 of his points before the intermission. Powell, who had four points in the first half, held the hot hand in the second half, and forced the Rams to take some concentration away from Chapple.

The plan was to keep Chapple contained by using two men, mostly Mike Gains, with Gordon Wood splitting the other half with Bruce Lubinich.

The plan went somewhat askew, however, when Gains, the Rams' best rebounder, picked up three fouls quickly and was called for his fourth violation at 6:44 of the second quarter.

Mud, sand, flies, snow and a tremendous range of temperatures will be experienced by both men and cars competing in the 1974 World Cup rally which starts in London's Wembley Stadium on May 5 and is expected to finish in Munich, Germany, three weeks later.

Munich is only 650 miles from London but drivers will be covering a total of about 12,500 miles through France, Portugal, Spain, North Africa, the Middle East, the Soviet Union and other eastern European countries before reaching the finish line.

This is the third World Cup rally, which resembles ordinary rallies about as much as the ascent of Mount Everest resembles a run up a flight of stairs.

The $22,500 first prize is expected to attract an entry of about 120 cars, including international teams from the principal auto manufacturers.

Most of the vehicles will be ordinary road models with special preparation for the event but organizers say they will accept any four-wheeled passenger car.

Few restrictions are imposed on competing cars but major components such as engine block, gearbox casing, axle casing and chassis will be marked to ensure they are not changed. They may be repaired but not replaced. In addition, crews may be asked to identify themselves at any stage in the journey, thus eliminating the possibility of spare drivers taking over.

Uncertainty about the effects of late rains in North Africa has prompted organizers to prepare several alternate routes in case of emergency.

After some difficult sections in England at the start, competitors will enjoy a relatively straightforward drive through continental Europe before embarking on their second sea crossing from Lisbon to Morocco.

The course crosses the Sahara Desert twice, where temperatures can be expected to top 100 degrees, and the final leg of the trip takes the field through the Carpathian Mountains before entering the forests of Czechoslovakia and Bavaria.

Tony Ambrose, who also organized the inaugural London-to-Sydney marathon in 1968 and the London-Mexico City event two years later, is running the 1974 rally in conjunction with the Royal Automobile Club and the sponsors, United Dominion Trust.

The 10,000-mile London-Sydney event was won by three British drivers in a Hillman-Hunter after the leading French and German cars were involved in accidents on the final drive across Australia.

Only 26 of the 99 starters made it all the way in the London-Mexico City competition, which ran through Yugoslavia, France, Italy and Portugal as well as through South America. A Finnish team driving a British-made Ford Escort took first prize.

Sure as Pat's Irish he believes in luck

Pat Ginnell is a hardworking realist, not inclined to put too much faith in miracles.

But the coach and general manager of the Victoria Cougars is enough of an Irishman to believe his team may be lucky enough to make the Western Canada Hockey League playoffs.

"It's all up to Kamloops now," Ginnell said this week after watching his charges take a humiliating 5-1 loss from the Bruins in New Westminster.

"If the Chiefs help us out by beating Edmonton once, we've still got a chance at the playoffs."

Following Wednesday action, Cougars trailed the fourth-place Oil Kings by three points but Edmonton had a home-and-home series scheduled with the last place Chiefs on Thursday and Friday.

Edmonton moved 5 points up on the Cougars Thursday by scoring a 4-1 win over Kamloops.

Two Edmonton victories would make tonight's game between the Oil Kings and Cougars at Memorial Arena almost meaningless. But one Kamloops win would leave Cougars with the task of defeating Edmonton and topping Medicine Hat Tigers the final two games of the league schedule here while counting on the Oil Kings losing their final game, in New Westminster on Sunday.

The Tigers will be at Memorial Arena for games on Sunday and Tuesday.

Ginnell tried every coaching ploy in the book this week in games against Calgary Centennials and the Bruins.

He put the Cougars through a stiff workout on Monday and then whisked the team up to Duncan. Cougars returned to Victoria shortly before game time Tuesday but the rest didn't seem to do much good as the Centennials scored a 6-4 win before 2,152 fans.

Cougars fell behind 4-1 in the first period but managed to rally to 4-4 in the second period before Calgary counted twice in the final session. Mark Lomenda (2), Rick LaPointe and mel Bridgman scored the Cougar goals.

Ginnell went against his tradition Wednesday by flying the team to Vancouver instead of using the bus and ferry route and it paid off with an excellent first period.

Cougars fought back to tie the score with Lomenda's goal late in the opening session but defensive lapses midway through the middle frame allowed the Bruins two quick goals.

The third period was marred by numerous fights that had no bearing on the outcome.

The loss was the sixth to the Bruins this season and left Cougars with a 1-6-3 record against the tough Royal City squad in 10 games this season.

Meanwhile, two Cougars are within reach of team scoring records established last season by left-winger Dale Cook.

Brad Anderson has 45 goals, one short of the record, and needs six points to pass the team scoring mark of 95. And Lomenda has 48 assists, one short of the record 49.

Spartans keep rugby crown

It was a lot closer this time around but Claremont Spartans are the champs again—for the sixth year in a row.

Spartans needed a penalty goal by their kicker Dave Robbins to nip Oak Bay 3-0 in the last match of the season to clinch the Victoria High School Rugby League title.

That victory gave the Spartans 12 wins in 13 matches in the 10-school, two-division league. Second place is shared by the Bays and Vic High, who were right behind Claremont with 11 wins each. Normally there would be a playoff for second spot but Vic High leaves next week for a spring rugby tour of Britain.

St. Michael's University School, which defaulted its last three league games because of the Easter break, finished fourth and fifth-place Mount View picks up the last playoff berth as Vic High will be away.

Claremont, which has also won the playoff trophy, the Howard Russell Cup, for the last five years, takes on St. Michael's and Oak Bay plays Mount View in the semi-finals April 1 and the winners meet in the cup final April 5.

The top three—Claremont, Oak Bay and St. Michael's—all qualify for the B.C. high-school spring rugby championships in Langley April 12 and 13.

Italia finds two reasons

Vancouver Italia will be a particularly tough opponent for Victoria London Boxing Club in today's B.C. Soccer League game at Royal Athletic Park.

Not only will the Italians be out to protect their 17-game unbeaten streak, they'll be striving to stay well ahead of the charging New Westminster Blues. Game time is 2 p.m.

Blues, who have two games in hand on the first-division leaders, closed to within seven points on Wednesday by topping Vancouver Sporting Club 4-1 at Queen's Park Stadium.

The win moved the Blues out of a second-place deadlock with University of B.C. Thunderbirds, who are one point up on the fourth-place Boxers.

League-leading scorer Gary Thompson notched his 24th goal of the season for New Westminster and John Connor, Carlos Torres and Ron McDonald also scored. Alex Irwin scored for Sporting Club.

In league play this weekend, UBC will meet Pegasus and Victoria Gorge-Molsons will tangle with Sporting Club in a Sunday doubleheader at Empire Stadium; Westminster will play North Shore Paul's at Kinsmen Stadium and the Greek Olympics and Hungarian Turul will clash at Capilano Stadium.

Pros lure Adanac coach

Expressly brief

Bill Bradley has grabbed the lure dangled by professional lacrosse and Coquitlam Adanacs will be operating under a new coach during this summer's Western Lacrosse Association season.

Bradley has resigned as playing-coach of the Adanacs to accept a similar position with the Montreal club in the newly-formed eastern pro circuit and Adanacs have selected Keith McEachern to handle the Coquitlam coaching chores.

After playing at Windsor, Ont., in 1972, Bradley moved to Coquitlam last year and guided the Adanacs to a second-place finish behind Vancouver Burrards, who defeated Adanacs in the playoff final.

Bradley was named coach and defenceman on the all-star team after scoring 19 goals and collecting 38 assists in the 25 regular-season games he played.

Former senior player in Chilliwack, Kamloops and Burnaby, McEachern was in charge of player development for Burrards in 1970, commissioner for the Pacific Junior "A" League the next two seasons, and general manager of the Adanacs last year.

While Adanacs were being jolted by Bradley's decision, Burrards received some happier news when they learned that goalkeeper Dave Evans, reported earlier to have signed a pro contract, has rejected an offer from the east and will remain with the club.

These things also happened in the wonderful world of Leading Scorer in the National Basketball Association, Kareem Abdul-Jabbar of Milwaukee Bucks has been named winner of Podoloff Trophy as the league's most-valuable player. The seven-foot-two centre received 528 points to 451 for Buffalo's Bob McAdoo in balloting by NBA players. Bob Lanier of Detroit finished third. Financier C. Arnholt Smith has been prohibited from spending any of $12-million he received from the sale of the San Diego Padres baseball team because of creditors' claims.

running-back Sonny Campbell, who has been timed in 4.6 seconds over 40 yards, has been signed to a Western Football Conference contract by B.C. Lions. Campbell, 26, was with Atlanta Falcons for two NFL seasons and sat out last season after breaking an arm in training camp.

West German champion Bayern Munich went down 2-1 in Bulgaria to CSKA Sofia but qualified 5-3 on aggregate. Meanwhile, 33-year-old former England captain Bobby Moore made his debut for Fulham in London this week as the English League second-division club went tumbling to a 4-0 home defeat Middlesbrough.

Moore, who ended 16 years with West Ham when he joined Fulham for a $57,500 transfer fee last week, played well in his first league match since January.

But he stood alone for most of the time against the fast-

Late-season perils waiting for Leafs

A seven-point margin with eight games left is probably safe enough, but the possibility does exist that Toronto Maple Leafs may have to worry a bit about that fourth playoff spot in the National Hockey League's East Division.

The closing schedule calls for the Leafs to prove their mettle. They started their West Coast swing with a 1-1 tie against the fast-moving Los Angeles club, and the Leafs may badly need the points from Sunday's game against Vancouver Canucks, a club which has proved bothersome to them ever since it was formed.

After completion of the West Coast trip, the Leafs are at home to Chicago Black Hawks, New York Rangers and Buffalo Sabres and play away against Rangers, Montreal Canadiens and Boston Bruins.

With the Leafs 1-3-3 in their last seven games after that draw in Los Angeles and Sabres unbeaten in three, the April 6 game in Toronto just could be all-important. The Sabres have the easier finishing schedule, numbering New York Islanders, St. Louis Blues, Pittsburgh Penguins, Minnesota North Stars and Detroit Red Wings among their remaining eight opponents.

Meanwhile, Montreal

Canadiens and New York Rangers continued to look something less than solid in high-scoring Wednesday losses to also-rans.

Both are having trouble defensively, and it was never more evident than on Wednesday when Canadiens were taken down, 7-6, by the Wings, and the Rangers blew a 7-5 decision to Vancouver Canucks, who scored three goals in the last two minutes.

Defeat was the fifth, to go with a tie, in nine games for Canadiens, who yielded 29 goals in the five setbacks. Rangers are only 2-4 in their last six starts, giving up 21 goals in the four defeats.

The Islanders, battling Canucks to avoid a last-place finish, also made a bit of news this week by getting three out of a possible four points, and putting perhaps the final dent in the all-but-wrecked playoff hopes of two West Division clubs. Islanders, ending the season's longest losing streak at 12 games, trounced St. Louis Blues, 5-1, on Tuesday, then followed up Wednesday by holding Pittsburgh's late-charging Penguins to a 1-1 tie.

That Tuesday failure in New York almost certainly doomed the Blues, leaving them five points away from fourth place with a finishing schedule about as tough as it is possible to get. They were in against Philadelphia Flyers and the Hawks twice each, and Bruins, Canadiens and Sabres once each in their last nine games.

Atlanta Flames, almost certainly the club Flyers have to beat out, had only three out of nine games against the top clubs. Minnesota North Stars, only a point behind the Flyers after Wednesday's games, remained a fourth-place threat with a 6-3 Tuesday win against California Golden Seals. But the North Stars had six of their last nine games away from home. They've been a 5-18-10 road club and included in their remaining games are two against the Flyers and one against the Hawks and Sabres.

In the best position behind the Flyers and Hawks are the Kings. Their 1-1 tie against Leafs Tuesday ran their unbeaten string to eight games, and left them seven points ahead of the fifth-place Blues with all the best of it in the schedule.

Housing site, no! PENS PUSH FOR PARK

A 700-foot petition urging preservation of the University of B.C. Endowment Lands was tabled in the legislature this week.

Pat McGeer (L-Vancouver-Point Grey) presented the massive list which contained 12,000 names

The provincial government has said it plans to use the extensive university land for new housing development.

The petition said the lands should be preserved for three reasons, their value as a park, because the increasing density of the Lower Mainland,

Talented minister speaking Sunday

A hymn writer, novelist, poet and preacher — Rev. Dr. Abel Masilamani from India — will speak at 7 p.m. and 8:30 p.m. Sunday in Emmanuel Baptist Church.

Masilamani and his wife, Vimala, are on a year-long tour of Canada as an expression of appreciation on the part of his people for the 100 years of Christian missionary work in India by Canadian Baptists.

He has been a pastor, seminary professor and principal, church administrator, evangelist and conference speaker. He has acted as Billy Graham's official interpreter in India and is Bible Society secretary for Southern India.

While in Victoria, Masilamani will give a talk at noon Monday in the Student Union Building under the sponsorship of the Interspersary Christian Fellowship.

Young people join forces

Young people from six churches in Greater Victoria joined forces this winter to produce a musical production — Come Together — which they presented in Newcombe auditorium, Christian Reformed, Metropolitan United, Emmanuel Baptist and Gordon Head Parish and other churches.

The net proceeds of the endeavor — $1,100 — were given this week to John King, director of the Lifeline drug rehabilitation centre on Blanshard Street, to be used in running the centre which ministers to addicts trying to shake the habit.

"The money raised is a find tribute to the social concern of the young people of Victoria," said Karl Janzen, lay preacher of Emmanuel Baptist.

Church that love built

Garden City Church was built in one day in September, 1913, by volunteer labor.

In the beginning it was just a shell but the church was used as work continued. It was completed in 1922. The church, at 4054 Carey Road, has been affiliated with

Wilkinson Road Church ever since it was built. In the early days the congregation was made up of Methodists, Presbyterians and Congregationalists. Both churches became part of the United Church of Canada in 1925. The church as it stands today represents the dream of one of its earlier ministers, Rev. J. Currie Thompson, which became a reality under the direction and guidance of Rev. E. J. Staley and his wife.

The old church was demolished and the basement of the present one built in 1957. The first service in the new premises was held on Easter Sunday of that year. Two years later the sanctuary was completed.

The church today is filling a need in the community with many youth activities and clubs in addition to regular church services. It is still linked with Wilkinson Road Church in a pastoral charge which is ministered to by Rev. Geoff Smith and his wife Jara. Celebrations for the 60th anniversary this year include a dinner in the new church hall at 6:30 p.m. today. Guest speaker will be Colonelist columnist Gorde Hunter.

Guest preacher at 10 a.m. Sunday will be Rev. Lawrence Sieber, a former minister.

After Sunday's service the congregation will meet for sandwiches and coffee and see a display of pictures dating back to 1913.

They'll be reminiscing about members from the early days like Mr. and Mrs. Jack Jones, Mrs. Mary Crosland, the Smiths, Straiths, Pimlotts, Snowsells and others.

Mrs. Crosland was church organist for 19 years and retired only a few years ago. Mrs. Jones prepared the communion table for 27 years. Her husband, Jack, directed the church's choir that won the Victoria Music Festival shield five consecutive years in the 1920s.

The very next World Fair, however, will definitely be in this world, for Expo '76 from May 4 to Nov. 1, 1976, in Spokane, Wash.

World's Fair rises on skidroad skeleton

World's Fairs seem almost constantly with us — although they have a "now you can reach me, now you can't" quality as they appear and vanish around the world.

The very next World's Fair, however, will definitely be reachable in this part of the world, for Expo '74 will run from May 4 to Nov. 3 in Spokane, Wash.

This one makes no pretence of being the world's largest. It is, however, timely in its theme; and that theme has perhaps a more lasting value than those of some other fairs: Celebrating Tomorrow's Fresh, New Environment.

Creation of the fair itself has done just that for Spokane. All buildings and exhibits are contained on two small islands in the Spokane River and along its banks, in a 100-acre half-water-half-land area that once typified inner city decay.

Where once society's outcasts lurched bleary-eyed along a riverfront skid road, bulldozers and cranes pushed and lifted.

Where once locomotives chuffed into two obsolete stations on a sprawl of tracks, an opera house and new pavilions, and a new downtown city park are materializing.

"We have condensed 25 years of urban development into less than three years," says Paul Creighton, Expo '74's site development director. "When the fair is over, Spokane will have one of the finest riverfront parks and convention centres in the United States."

riverfront site, and construction began in 1973.

Among the international exhibitors are Canada and two of its provinces: British Columbia and Alberta. They will share one of the islands, and like all the others, emphasize the environment.

Expo '74 organizers, who admit they are holding their breath over the gasoline situation, are still pushing ahead with plans that include a hoped-for total of 4.8 million visitors.

Questioned by people who remember complaints of rip-offs in accommodation for visitors during Expo '67 in Montreal, they assure the listener that every precaution is being taken to prevent such goings-on.

By February, as a matter of fact, more than $3 million in advance tickets had been sold — about 20 per cent of the estimated gate gross.

Visitors will see the latest in what the U.S. is doing about cleaning up the environment, and other countries will follow suit, adding examples of their productive ability and, through entertainment, their cultural backgrounds.

Visitors will also be able to enjoy the latest in amusement park offerings. Rides and other equipment are now being built in Europe, and when the fair is over it will all be sent to Israel, where it will be set up as a permanent amusement park.

There will be top-flight entertainers in all fields, ranging from ballet to pop music, from opera to country-western. Bob Hope will be

Food poisoning threat seen

SPOKANE, Wash. — A health official has predicted major food poisoning problems when an estimated five million persons visit Expo '74 in Spokane.

Dr. E. O. Ploeger blamed the danger on the lack of financing to prevent and cope with food poisoning problems.

En Route

By Express Motoring Correspondent

When the Suez Canal was blocked and oil supplies to Britain almost dried up, drivers turned to drink to keep their cars running.

Newspapers ran photos of drunken motorists pouring bottles of Scotch and other spirits into their fuel tanks.

But however desperate the situation, no one dared pour water into the tank — until an Austrian inventor found you could get away with it and even improve mileage.

Back in 1953 Joseph Scherz discovered a way to combine gas and water using what chemists call an emulsifying agent.

Tests carried out with the Scherz emulsifier in Vienna a few years later were quite remarkable.

A mixture of 69 per cent low grade gasoline and 31 per cent water enriched with the chemical was tried out in a new Volkswagen engine.

It produced a 20 per cent saving of gas while giving a normal performance, provided the engine was run within prescribed temperature limits.

But in those days there was little fear of a gas shortage and there was no commercial interest in the Scherz experiment.

The recent shortage, though, caused a scurry for ways to save gas and improve mileage and so Scherz's son and daughter, who inherited the patent, have been besieged by offers from all over the world.

They believe that further experiments could lead to an improved gas-water mixture enabling cars to run more effectively on cheaper fuel.

Jet aircraft engines are injected with water to increase efficiency and there are grounds for pursuing the invention with the emphasis on car engines.

A major oil company has admitted that mixing gas and water was feasible and that several emulsifying agents were now known.

Experiments are now being carried out in America and, at a symposium organized by Britain's Institute of Mechanical Engineers, it was stated that the Americans found the precise addition of water to gas not only made a car engine run more efficiently but substantially reduced exhaust products which cause pollution.

The car engine had to be adapted to receive the mixture and the only snag appeared to be that if the water supply (about 26 per cent of the gas) failed, the new engine could not run on gas alone.

Amend passport forms, says labor

Passport application forms guarantor for an applicant, should be amended so that any Victoria Labor Council Canadian citizen can be a advocated Wednesday.

And the council will write to the federal government asking for changes so that the form no longer discriminates against working men.

A mayor, lawyer, notary public, professional engineer, dentist or medical officer for example, said Belfit, but not by a working man, or even by a union business agent.

Non-union caterers?

Victoria Labor Council and the Carpenters and Laborers' unions are using a non-union firm to cater social events, a delegate to Victoria Labor Council charged at Wednesday night's meeting. To discourage the practice, council passed a motion that all unions should in future use only union caterers.

It is, said the letter, a sad commentary on the trade union movement that union people have said that if the strikers were men the strike would not have gone on so long.

SWAG pointed out that this is the third lengthy Victoria strike, and each of them has been a strike of women employees — Teamsters members against Hi Fidelity for two years, and the recently settled Sandringham private hospital strike which lasted more than three years.

Council secretary treasurer Larry Ryan said the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, to which the women belong, has acted for them, and had not refused to communicate with SWAG.

He said when SWAG held a meeting to discuss the strike the union was trying to negotiate with the company through a mediator, and those talks took precedence over SWAG's interest.

IBEW had spent $30,000 to date in support of the strike, and had also helped set up a rival company (not yet unionized) to supply an answering service and give employment to the strikers.

UVic students get chance to air beefs

A series of open hearings to discover student complaints at University of Victoria got off to a halting start this week when only six of 5,000 students showed up to air problems.

The committee on the welfare of students—ordered a month ago by UVic President Dr. Hugh Farquhar, to poll student opinion—had arranged for a four-hour hearing Monday afternoon, and three hearings later in the week.

Committee chairman Horace Beach said he hoped more students would take part in later hearings, and added a series of "beef boxes" located around campus and phone lines might be more useful in collecting student opinions because of their confidentiality.

The committee was formed to consider all matters affecting the welfare of students, he said. "We want the students to feel free in leveling with us."

All children 'legitimate'

VANCOUVER — The term "illegitimate child" should be abolished by a law making all children legitimate, B.C. Supreme Court Justice Tom Berger said this week.

Berger, head of the provincial royal commission on family and children's law, said there is a "great gap" between the legal rights of legitimate and illegitimate children.

And the social stigma attached to children born out of wedlock is something "the law can begin to change as a matter of social policy," he said.

English rights assured

MONTREAL — Education Minister Francois Cloutier this week gave assurance that the acquired language rights of Quebec's English-speaking minority will be protected under the provincial government's planned language legislation.

He said the Liberal government's language-of-instruction policy was "leaning" towards application only to future immigrants' children, not those already in Quebec.

STARGUIDE: Ever wondered what sign you were born under? Following are the 12 symbols of the Zodiac. The sign after which your birthdate is bracketed is the ruling figure of your chart. Aries (March 21-April 20); Taurus (April 21-May 21); Gemini (May 22-June 21); Cancer (June 22-July 23); Leo (July 24-Aug. 23); Virgo (Aug. 24-Sept. 23); Libra (Sept. 24-Oct. 23); Scorpio (Oct. 24-Nov. 22); Sagittarius (Nov. 23-Dec. 21); Capricorn (Dec. 22-Jan. 20); Aquarius (Jan. 21-Feb. 19); Pisces (Feb. 20-March 20).

The unsettled conditions that have prevailed over the past lunar phase continue with turmoil indicated for many charts. Be patient, Aries. Under these configurations, much is promised but little delivered. You need to think and act in a positive fashion in order to banish the fears and insecurities which swirl about you at home.

You, too, Taurus, will face trouble getting the co-operation you need at home to further financial schemes and plans even though they are winners. On Sunday, guard your reputation as new patterns begin to emerge in your social life.

Your hopes, too, Gemini, are dimmed by circumstance. Because of the uncertainties of others around you, you are warped by the chaotic maelstrom of life.

Be braced for a trying weekend, Sagittarius. The words above which are aimed at the Heavenly twins are also designed for you.

An early disappointment on Sunday, Cancer, will destroy the placid tenor which had theretofore been the keynote of the weekend. Take heed, things mechanical will be your undoing. Likewise, Leo, Child of the Lion, be wary, especially when travelling. This is a good weekend to stay close to home and hearth. Your fertile mind, as you look about your property, can see many improvements and these are propitious days to commence projects concerning them.

As you enjoy the early warmth and regeneration of spring, Aquarius, also study your surroundings. There is much to do and with a little forethought it will not prove too costly.

Spend your time, Virgo, in severe reflection and earnest discussion. Talk with loved ones and close friends about monetary matters. Career aspirations even though entered into lightly could set you on a new and previously unthought-of direction.

Your aspects, Libra, and favorable for the restoration of family harmony and also provide stimulus for paperwork at home in budget planning and bill-paying.

New neighbors and old friends, Scorpio, can complicate matters this weekend. Avoid impatience and intolerance. Remember, though the present be fleeting, the future stretches far ahead of you and a rift created now will not be healed when clearer minds and thoughts prevail.

True to your independent nature, Capricorn, you get on best this weekend working by yourself at your own pace. These are excellent days for handling duties and responsibilities you have postponed because of their distasteful nature.

This is a slow but now always easy weekend, Pisces. The pressures are spotty and hard to define. They are due mainly to the discord which is rampant on other charts. However, you are lucky in that you have a Sagittarian friend in whom you can confide your problems and woes.

Old wood burners now the in thing

Across North America, buying up old wood stoves has become the "in" thing with the arty set.

But on Vancouver Island, it's the practical instinct of the pioneer that prevails, making the stoves a popular but rare commodity.

There was a time when a rusting stove could be bought cheaply in most of the second-hand stores along Johnson.

Now the proprietors say they could get rich if they could find a cache of them.

Palmer's Stove Store hasn't had one in stock since last September when people started worrying about the energy crisis. They sold for $75 to $125.

The old stoves don't have to be an objet d'art to entice buyers.

A nickel-plated coal and wood burner, with no claim to any lineage worth noting, brought $325 at a recent Olde Towne auction sale.

In every store visited by an Express reporter it was the same story: You want an old wood stove? You have to be kidding!

Stores that carry reproductions of old pot-bellied burners, Franklin stoves and other antiques, also do a booming business when they have them.

A spokesman for Victoria Fireplace Shop Ltd. said: "It's not just because they're arty that people buy wood stoves. All kinds of people want them—people with cabins, hippies, people who want them as garbage burners in their basement. As for the little box stoves, they grab them up as soon as we get them."

Monte Wright admires old station heater

He explained that up-Island and Gulf Island residents make up the bulk of his customers, spurning handsome electric jobs.

These buyers are joined by Victorians attracted by the store's slogan—"Live Modern-Burn Wood."

Even those who once spurned the wood-swallowers are changing their attitude.

"One man who came in from the Gulf Islands told me that not too many years ago he and his friends took them out in boats to dump them because they didn't know how else to get rid of them," the spokesman said.

He pointed to a big cook stove, obviously just out of its packing crate.

"That one weighs 400 pounds," he said, "and has been sold to a couple who have built a new home on one of the Gulf Islands."

The stove-buying mania is repeated in other North America centres but not for the same reasons.

New York's arty set use them to create individuality in their surroundings. Designer Shirley Regendahl, for example, has a white enamelled Belgian stove in the dining room of her highrise.

She uses it to keep all her telephone books behind its filigreed doors.

Thursday wasn't much of a 21st birthday for Victoria resident Jerald Kenneth Trotter.

Already serving one year imposed last Dec. 3 for break-ins and thefts, Trotter was sentenced by Judge William Ostler in Victoria provincial court to an extra month for another theft.

Trotter pleaded guilty to a charge of stealing an $8.88 pair of pants March 15 from the Metropolitan store on Douglas. Prosecutor Peter Birkett and defence lawyer David Lisson told this story:

Trotter was released on the morning of March 15 from the Wilkeson Road provincial jail in Saanich on a one-day work pass. However, it was raining and the job was cancelled.

Instead of returning to jail, Trotter stole the pants and got drunk, winding up on a washroom floor of the Chandler Hotel, 723 Yates. He asked Ostler for a sentence to a B.C. Mainland detention unit for alcoholics and the judge gave him one month there, plus his remaining time from last December.

A statement by prosecutor Michael Hutchison that the crown did not demand imprisonment for a Saanich woman caused Ostler to give her a suspended sentence and a two-year probationary term.

Carolyn Selma June Brooks, 3080 Albina, had pleaded guilty March 4 to a charge of possession of about 60 capsules of MDA last Oct. 31 at her residence for the purpose of trafficking.

Hutchison said the crown felt this was an unusual case in that Mrs. Brooks had no previous record and was "not involved in the drug sub-culture."

Herbie Isadore Woods, 20, of 553 David, made two mistakes late Tuesday—kicking in a $200 pawnshop window at 1323 Government and doing it in front of a taxi driver he had called to take him home.

Woods pleaded guilty to a charge of mischief and said he kicked the window because "I was mad at my wife." Prosecutor Birkett told Ostler the driver took Woods home and then informed police. Woods, with a record of seven convictions in the past three years was sentenced to one month in jail.

Frederick Elfred Laundry, 21, of 412 Ker, was sentenced by Ostler to 12 months definite and 12 months indeterminate for a March 1 break-in and theft at the Chinese Village Restaurant, 755 Finlayson.

Laundry admitted March 4 he took coins, cigarettes, cameras and other items worth a total of about $434.

Darwin Allan Ewart, 22, also of 412 Ker, was fined $250 and put on probation for one year following his plea of guilty to a charge of possession of known stolen property—$273 worth of the items taken by Laundry.

Leonard Earl Borden, 17, no fixed address, was remanded by Ostler to April 11 for sentence after admitting a car theft Tuesday in Victoria. Birkett described a complex method used by Borden in an attempt to present the stolen 1970 Cougar as his own and the judge said: "He's a pretty cool customer for that age. I wouldn't want all of that modus operandi to become too well known."

In traffic court, Judge Edmond Jorre de St. Jorre set a three-month jail term for Helmut Gruber, 22, of 1712 Hovey, who admitted driving without insurance Jan. 15 in Saanich. He had two similar convictions in 1971.

Universities' plea More funds sought

Presidents of the province's three public universities are expecting a response shortly from Premier Dave Barrett after their combined plea Tuesday for more operating funds.

University of Victoria President Dr. Hugh Farquhar told The Express this week more funds could take the form of an increase in the $110 million operating grant included in the provincial budget, or special grants. He expressed hope for the latter.

The three university presidents met with the premier and Education Minister Eileen Daily in what Farquhar called a historic meeting. He said discussion was "frank and fruitful" and "free-wheeling and wide-ranging."

"It was a full and useful discussion on our current needs for operating expenses and we told the premier outright the problems we're facing in meeting expenses with the grant promised."

Farquhar said until the universities hear from the premier they will continue forming their individual budgets with the present allocation of funds. "We made our case and left it with him and we're anticipating his response soon."

With Farquhar at the meeting were Kenneth Strand of Simon Fraser University and Walter Gage of the University of B.C.

Following the meeting Mrs. Daily said the government made no financial commitments to the presidents. She added she and deputy minister Jack Fleming will meet with university officials again for more detailed talks.

Greater Victoria school board has decided in future to build Grade 8 through 12 high schools where possible. One such school, for 500 students in Gordon Head, is already being planned.

Saanich community

secondary school, now renamed Spectrum school, will probably be the last senior secondary built in the district.

Like most other senior secondaries in the district, it will be chiefly Grade 11 and 12 students, with a few Grade 10s.

Saanich school board is moving toward Grade 9 through 12 high schools.

Parkland secondary school, which opened last September, is the first Saanich school to fit the Grade 9 to 12 model, but the board hopes eventually to convert Claremont senior secondary as well.

The Saanich board intends to convert its junior highs into so-called "middle" schools, containing Grades 6 through 8. First such conversion was North Saanich junior secondary, which became a middle school in September.

Sooke school board last month approved a two-pronged policy for changing high schools.

Belmont-Fisher secondary school became a 1,600-student Grade 8 through 12 school in September, and Dunsmuir junior secondary will be converted to one by September 1975.

But in the long run the board wants both schools to become Grade 10 through 12 high schools, with new junior highs including Grade 7 through 9.

The high school structure the three boards are abandoning has been around since publication of the Chant report on education in 1962.

The report proposed a three-grade junior high school where students would be given a chance to explore different subject areas, and a two-grade senior high where students would specialize in one area of study.

That system hasn't worked so well, said Eric Lewis, superintendent of schools for Saanich school board.

Junior high students haven't always had the freedom to do the exploration they were supposed to, he said.

And once they're in senior high, students are often streamed too rigidly into one area of study, said Lewis. If they find they're in the wrong program they don't have time in two years to switch to another.

"You need more than two years to get continuity of programs," he said.

Dr. John Wiens, director of instruction in Greater Victoria district, said he would prefer schools that went from kindergarten through Grade 12, and even included junior colleges.

"I think we've created a bit of a monster by pretending that children learn only with children of their own age," said Wiens. In a school with children of all ages, the younger and older ones could learn from each other, he said.

Consolidated high schools coming

The day of junior and senior high schools as we know them is ending.

All three local school boards, Greater Victoria, Saanich and Sooke, are abandoning the idea of big two-grade senior high schools and Grade 8 to 10 junior highs.

Greater Victoria school board has decided in future to build Grade 8 through 12 high schools where possible.

WHEN YOU'RE just a lowly clam, life on the beach is down-to-earth. And when you inhabit a popular beach like Willows in Oak Bay, life is fraught with hazards. People take you home for an ashtray or kids see how far they can skip you over the waves. After awhile it gets sort of lonely.

Prospect Lake artist wants wider clientele

Prospect Lake artist Herbert Siebner knows his latest idea may cause some rumblings in artistic circles but it makes a lot of sense to him.

He has put together a small booklet, about 4 by 5 1/2 inches, with miniature reproductions of a selection of his original graphics.

He calls it a Studio-Home-Gallery and also refers to it as his Letter Box Gallery. More than 300 copies have gone to art galleries and private collectors around the world.

Siebner isn't worried that some may consider the venture too commercial or say it just isn't done.

"I want to reach a wider clientele," he said in an interview. "University galleries, art galleries and collectors in Europe, Japan, North America, Australia and New Zealand."

Prints are easily transportable, he said, (he will mail them unmounted, in tubes), and there are sophisticated art collectors in the world who are possible clients for his prints, of which he has more than 5,000.

"A print shows more of an artist's form language and is usually a more intimate expression," Siebner explained. "A collector of graphics is more sure of collecting good works of art. An artist usually chooses subjects for his graphics that he is fond of and that he has worked over many times."

printed and signed by the artist and most are priced from $40 to $100. The largest is 6 by 2 feet and is an artist's proof on linen of what Siebner calls a life-size book scraffito-stone print, which is in the collection of the city of Victoria. It sells for $175.

The artist's well-known themes of horses, centaurs, giants, crowds and sun goddesses are well represented in the collection.

Siebner was born in Stettin, Germany, in 1925, studied at the Berlin Academy, and came to Canada in 1954. He has had one-man shows across Canada, in the U.S. and in many European capitals.

He has won several awards in graphics, sculpture and painting, a Canada Council grant and was guest of honor at the academy in Germany. He became a member of the Royal Canadian Academy last year.

The artist is not averse to rocking the boat when he feels it needs it.

Four years ago he took his pictures out of galleries.

"It was a ridiculous situation," he said. "Artists just can't afford to exhibit the way it was."

He said they had to pay crating, shipping, insurance, framing, commission, travel expenses if they attended and then a commission if any works sold.

"I had a show in Montreal once," he said, "and it cost me about $1,500. The only thing

Siebner with largest print in collection

the gallery supplied was a table cloth."

Now, thanks to him and other artists who refused to continue the tradition, galleries pay expenses and a fee to the artist, Siebner said.

De Costa will retire

Esquimalt Alderman Ed De Costa has announced his intention to retire at the end of this year, ending a 16-year career on council.

An engine fitter at HMC Dockyard, De Costa said this week he wants to avoid causing a by-election, so will continue as alderman for the duration of his term.

A long-time spokesman for recreation and public works in the municipality, the alderman, who lives at 774 Hutchison, said he plans to move to the Bowser area.

"I always thought I'd like to retire up-Island, and now that I'm 55, I guess it's time," he said.

"He'll be sadly missed in the municipality," commented Mayor Art Young when told of the development. "He was one of the mainstays of the Esquimalt council during most of the last 20 years."

Currently chairman of public works committee and deputy mayor, De Costa said he has always advocated development of widely-used recreational facilities in the municipality and one of the highpoints of his career was the opening of the Sports Centre.

He charges executives more for their meals than factory workers, and lets pensioners, strikers and the unemployed eat for free at his Truly Communist Restaurant.

"I do this because I admire Lenin and Karl Marx," said Lazvezzi.

PARIS—Restaurant owner Claude Lazvezzi has taken the old Marxist aphorism "from each according to his ability" to heart.

He charges executives more for their meals than factory workers, and lets pensioners, strikers and the unemployed eat for free at his Truly Communist Restaurant.

"I do this because I admire Lenin and Karl Marx," said Lazvezzi.

Not dangerous

A 19-year-old William Head prisoner who escaped custody after attending a hockey game Tuesday was still free on Thursday.

Colwood RCMP said James Wendal Willson, serving a two-year term for breaking and entry with intent, blended into the crowd leaving Memorial Arena after a hockey game and disappeared.

He had been watching the game with nine other inmates and two guards.

Willson is not considered dangerous.

Bennett's grip shaky, until the Robertts show

By Express

EXPRESSVIEW

A delightful one-act political drama was performed this week in the office of the official opposition leader and no one enjoyed the performance more than the director himself.

Bill Bennett grinned and chuckled and was close to rubbing his hands with glee as he presented his latest protégé.

The new star was Graeme Roberts, an ideal player for the political stage. Handsome, bow-tied and a youngish 43, Roberts' only shortcoming is a bonus on the Social Credit credits—he's a car dealer.

The performance was billed as Bennett's "first formal press conference" and while the plot was embarrassingly thin, the acting was superb. Roberts, so the story went, had only moments before taken out a membership in the Social Credit party.

The twist was the 18 months ago Roberts was an unsuccessful Conservative candidate in Nanaimo.

After watching the NDP government in action, Roberts told the audience of reporters, he had decided the Social Credit party is the best vehicle for doing away with the socialist hordes.

Roberts will not be burning his membership card in the Conservative party since, he said, he will continue to support the Conservatives federally.

The new convert finds "no ideological differences" between the Conservatives and the revived Socred group under the younger Bennett.

"Bill Bennett has emerged as a sound and qualified leader, his theme of unity in the two recent by-elections is the only way to go," said Roberts in a prepared statement (prepared by whom, one might well ask).

"There is no need for coalition when you have thousands wanting to work together—coalition is compromise—unity is strength."

Delivered in thunderous tones, the words might almost have sounded frightening, but written in a dreary press release they were hardly noticed.

In fact, the scribes gathered for the performance were noticeably unconvinced.

But Bennett continued to cluck with pride. Roberts, he predicted, is only the first of many who will be rushing to join the Socreds from other political parties.

The entire affair was an orchestrated non-event, but Bennett continued to smile because he had pulled off an excellent political move and he knew it.

The recent flurry over formation of a new, unified opposition party posed a threat to his short tenure as opposition leader and he needed to move quickly and surely to confirm himself as the head of any free-enterprise opposition party.

Whether or not other people will begin flocking to the Socred fold, Bennett had taken the initiative from leaders of the other opposition parties and from any ambitious backbenchers who might see themselves in the role of free-enterprise messiah.

Throughout the Majority Movement debate and talk about unifying opposition members in the house, the Socreds have insisted they would not give up their identity to merge with another party of any kind.

They said they would be the leaders in strengthening the opposition against the NDP and now Bennett has taken concrete steps to prove his point.

The purpose of presenting the Roberts' affair was to prove that the younger Bennett has moved the Socreds far enough up the ladder of respectability to attract an ambitious free-enterpriser.

Now the question is whether Bennett will go so far as to change the name of his party and finally bury that burdensome 20-year history.

That move could bury the Liberals and Conservatives as well.

Bennett said he wasn't on an "ego trip" when he took over the Socreds and it would be up to the party to decide on a name change.

But he wasn't at all surprised, however, that someone would ask him about a name change and his pitch for unity suggests a new stage name for the Socreds may well be on the way.

Tax deferment: here's what it's all about

Starting this year, senior citizens, widows, blind and otherwise disabled persons will be able to defer their annual property taxes.

Small businesses may defer part of their property taxes, provided they meet certain conditions.

The Real Property Deferment Act, introduced by Premier Barrett in the legislature this week, is designed to remove the increasing property tax burden from those who can least afford to pay it.

Barrett said outside the house he hopes that everybody eligible for the deferment scheme will take advantage of it.

Private schools 'should get aid'

Private schools should get some financial support from the provincial government, Liberal Leader David Anderson told the legislature this week.

Private schools, Anderson said, were saving taxpayers "million of dollars" by educating an estimated 23,000 children outside the B.C. public schools system.

Anderson's comments came during the legislature's debate on Education Minister Eileen Dailly's estimates.

He told the house it was "grossly unfair" to burden parents of students attending private schools with the entire cost of the tuition fee in addition to the regular school taxes they are paying.

He stressed that municipalities will not have to underwrite the scheme: the provincial government will pay to municipalities the amount deferred by property owners.

Eligible for the full deferment scheme are persons aged 65 or over, widows, blind, disabled or otherwise handicapped persons. Under the provisions of the act, they must have resided in B.C. for at least one year.

The deferred amount of taxes plus 8 per cent interest a year must be repaid when the property is sold or the owner dies. Repayment need not be made if the property is transferred to the surviving spouse.

Eligible for the partial tax deferment are small businesses whose 1974 property taxes increased by more than 20 per cent over 1973 taxes. To qualify for the scheme, they must have land and improvements not exceeding a value of $500,000.

have held title to the property on Dec. 31, 1973, and be paid up in their 1973 tax bill.

The amount that can be deferred is based on a sliding scale. In 1974, property owners may defer 85 per cent of taxes above a 20 per cent increase over 1973. By 1979, only 10 per cent of all taxes over 120 per cent of the 1974 level may be deferred and no further deferment will be possible in 1980.

Property tax increases resulting from physical changes in the property, such as new construction, may not be deferred.

Owners of vacant home sites may also defer their taxes on the same 85 per cent scale as small businesses. The deferment will only apply to owners of vacant property who plan to build homes.

The deferment cannot continue if the vacant residential land is not built on and used for residential purposes within 10 years, or if the property taxes are in arrears for six months or more.

COMMISSIONER URGES CHANGES

Assessment plan drawn

After listening to briefs and presentations from numerous groups concerned with B.C.'s property assessment methods, the legislature's special committee on assessment was given a blueprint this week of how to improve the present scheme. The recommendations came from assessment commissioner Percy Wright, an outspoken critic of political interference with property assessment.

Wright urged the government to immediately establish an "independent assessment authority," create a real property data bank, base assessments throughout the province on 100 per cent of actual or market value and provide adequate staff to the assessor's department.

Wright told the committee that uniform assessment value based on market value should be achieved in the 1975 assessment roll.

No restrictions should be permitted under a new assessment act and relief to property owners should be granted by way of taxation. Wright suggested tax reduction or partial tax exemption as a means of easing the blow to the property owner that would result from drastically increased assessments.

Wright's submission summed up the recommendations made by various organizations in the past few weeks.

The recurring theme of all briefs was the total breakdown of assessment equalization.

Political interference by the present and the former governments has thrown assessment equalization out of balance. The assessment scheme began to deteriorate when the Socred government, in an effort to offset property tax increases that resulted from escalating property value, placed a 10 per cent ceiling on the annual increase in assessment of residential land.

SOCIAL SERVICES PROGRAM

Communities interested in resources boards

About 30 communities have expressed interest in setting up resource boards which will work in liaison with the provincial human resources department. Human Resources Minister Norm Levi said this week.

The minister's comments came after he introduced legislation in the house enabling the establishment of regional and community resource boards.

Levi said outside the house the resource boards would coordinate all social services, including probation, mental health and children's aid. The boards of 10 to 15 elected members would work with the provincial human resources department.

Community boards will be elected for two-year terms, but the government may appoint the first board.

Main purpose of the legislation, Levi said, was to give people the opportunity to get involved in human resources programs.

"We can't tell from Victoria what programs are good for a community 200 miles or even 50 miles away," he said.

Skyline logging seminar topic

The advantages of "skyline logging" will be discussed at a mountain logging systems seminar March 28-29 in Castlegar.

Skyline logging is the method of removing timber from the forest by cable suspended between two points on the terrain. The biggest advantage of the system is that the timber is lifted clear off the ground without disturbing the forest floor as is inevitable when logs are dragged along the ground.

The system is of particular interest to B.C. because much of the province's timber grows on steep mountain slopes and removal by traditional means often creates serious damage to the forest environment.

Last year, B.C. Forest Service sent a forester to Norway, Austria and Switzerland to investigate methods used by those countries in steep-slope logging.

Hans Waelti came back with recommendations to experiment with skyline logging.

FALL REPORT

A B.C. Hydro task force studying power generation and transmission requirements for the province to the year 1990 will report early this fall, power authority officials report.

Headed by Dr. Harry M. Ellis, manager of Hydro's system engineering division, seven engineers and economists will review B.C. Hydro's planning criteria relating to load forecasting, rates, systems reliability and quality of service.

CERTAIN SIGN of spring is this lineup of lawnmowers for servicing outside Figgard Street business. Maybe another sign is workman taking his break in the sunshine. BCR future: losses In the House

Expectations of a rosy financial future for British Columbia Railway were crushed this week by BCR vice-president Mac Norris.

Norris told the legislature's public accounts committee that BCR will be "in a terrific loss position" for some years to come.

One of the major factors for his pessimism, he said, was the Crown corporation's 250-mile extension from Fort St. John to Fort Nelson, built a few years ago at a cost of $63.7 million.

Parts of the extension, Norris said, are being rebuilt at a cost of $12 million. He also referred to "52 trouble areas" along the line which resulted from poor and hasty construction.

Interest charges on the expenditures, Norris told the committee, will make BCR a money-loser for years.

Last year, BCR registered a loss of $3.9 million, the first since 1966. Norris in his annual report blamed two national rail strikes and BCR's own disputes plus a severe boxcar shortage for the deficit.

Asked about co-operation between BCR and Canadian National, Norris accused CN of acting "as if they own the BCR."

Since the boxcar shortage began last year, he said, CN has been organizing the five connecting railways that carry BCR-originated cargo to reduce BCR's share of freight revenue which is divided between all carriers.

The five carriers he referred to are CN, CP Rail, Union Pacific, Milwaukee Road and Burlington Northern.

To escape the squeeze caused by the boxcar shortage, Norris said, BCR was trying to acquire its own railcars as fast as possible. At present, the line has 5,000 cars, double the number it owned in 1970.

Foreign land owners face B.C. controls

British Columbia will have legislation before 1976 to control foreign ownership of land in the province.

Resources Minister Bob Williams said no timetable for introduction of the legislation was been worked out but an inter-departmental committee has done "a fair amount of work" in preparation for the new legislation.

The minister made the statement after meeting with the Vancouver chapter of the Committee for an Independent Canada.

An 11-page brief was presented to Williams and Premier Barrett by the committee and it outlined a plan for repatriation of B.C. land.

The committee, following the recommendations of an Ontario legislative committee last year, proposed that the government prohibit any further purchases of land by anyone who is not either a Canadian citizen or a landed immigrant.

Reports split blame for Salmon Arm fire

The $1 million fire which destroyed 16 homes in Salmon Arm last year has been blamed jointly on the B.C. Forest Service and a private logging company.

Two massive reports, one from the government and one by a private consulting firm tabled in the legislature this week, concluded that Federated Co-operatives Ltd. didn't comply fully with, nor did the forest service strictly enforce, terms of a slash-burning permit.

The slash fire began in the Fly Hills plateau in the late afternoon of Sept. 11, 1973, and moved eastward down the mountainside into the populated Gleneden area of Salmon Arm.

Primary factors contributing to the fire's escape and spread across the forest were high winds with low humidity, large accumulations of old slash left by other logging operations, the exposed nature of the area and the lack of aggressive mop-up by the company, said the reports.

While foresters at the spot misjudged the probable behavior of the fire, the reports said "even the most experienced fire manager would not have foreseen the peculiar combination of wind, topography, time of day, fuel distribution, that drove the fire down off the plateau."

Also the local ranger had not been given the revised wind forecast for the day.

Resources Minister Bob Williams said a decision on whether to seek from the logging company recovery of some $1 million spent from the provincial disaster fund to aid victims of the fire is in the hands of government lawyers, who are considering the report.

NDP scored

COBBLE HILL—Harsh criticism was levelled against the NDP government by three Sacred MLAs Wednesday night.

The occasion was a wine and cheese party put on by Cowichan-Malahat Social Credit Association at Cobble Hill Community Hall.

The three MLAs—Pat Jordan from North Okanagan, Bob McClelland from Langley and Newell Morrison from Victoria—were joined by Graeme Roberts from Nanaimo who was accepted as a Sacred party member by the Sacred caucus Tuesday.

Roberts had represented the Progressive Conservative party in the last provincial election in 1972. He told the 100 people at Cobble Hill that he was dismayed as to what is happening in Victoria. He said he had been watching the NDP government "fiasco" for some time and finally decided "that we are fighting for the same cause and for the same purposes, why not do it under one flag?"

Mrs. Jordan expressed concern about "the double standard that is developing in this province" and that "we will bring back responsible government and equal standard for all of us."

Morrison admitted that some things the NDP government has done were necessary and "some things the NDP are doing we should have done years ago." However, he was critical of Bill 42 which "is still the same"—still giving the commission the power to take away land "if they so desire." He also was concerned with Bill 71 "which gives him (Premier Barrett) the power to spend your money as he sees fit."

ESQUIMALT SPORTS CENTRE

By Express movie writer
It's a great week for the kiddies and the intellectuals among us — and Liv Ullmann fans have a double treat.
The new version of Robin Hood from that master factory of animation, Disney Productions, has finally arrived at the royal proving once again that no matter how hard the imitators try, the magic generated by old uncle Walt still has an influence on his successors.

However, if you still haven't seen or re-seen M-A-S-H, not to worry. It's not going away, base of operations for the madcap surgical cut-ups has merely been moved over to the Capitol.

A last-minute shuffling of schedules for Odeon theatres has meant that The Last Detail, the coarse but catchy naval yarn starring Jack Nicholson, is lingering at the Haida for another week instead of sailing off into the sunset.

In Odeon 1, the somewhat-fishy Day of the Dolphin has submerged the porno-cartoon Heavy Traffic and the first of the two Liv Ullmann flicks, The New Land, opened last night in Odeon 2. Co-starring with the Swedish lovely in this yard of Scandinavian immigrants battling the elements to carve a life in America is Max von Sydow, surely one of the most accomplished of actors on the screen today.

The other Liv Ullmann flick opened last night at the Fox. It's called Cries and Whispers and comes from the camera of the best film-maker in the world bar none — Ingmar Bergman.

Meanwhile, elsewhere in town:
CORONET (Yates between Blanshard and Quadra): Just about everything that can be said has been said about The Exorcist. The consensus seems to be that it's all hype and a mile wide. However, even if you just want to make up your mind about the influence of the media on movie-going tastes, it's worth braving the lineups and inflated ticket prices for this mediocre tale of the demonic possession of a pre-teen girl.

COUNTING HOUSE (Broad and Broughton): On and on they go and when they'll end nobody knows. A double-header nostalgia trip — if the Forties are your bag, then pop into Cinema 1 for The Way We Were... if you're a little later along the line, the Sixties live again in American Graffiti. Funny enough, these are two Oscar-nominated flicks that don't carry the black cat in this day of permissive cinema.

OAK BAY (Oak Bay Ave.): One of the best suspense flicks of the past couple of years, Day of the Jackal, is holding for another well-deserved week. A gripping yarn of an assassination attempt on the late Gen. Charles de Gaulle, it goes to prove the old adage that British movie-makers, when they turn to either thrillers or comedy, produce far above what is churned out in the Hollywood movie mills.

TOWNE (Douglas and Humboldt): We've waited three months for this new theatre in Nootka Court and we'll have to wait a little longer because of last-minute hassles with city regulations as recorded elsewhere in The Express. However, since their initial offering is the trashy Harrod Experiment, it's no great loss to city film fans.

PESKY PROBLEMS PLAGUE CINEMA

Victoria's newest movie house, Towne Cinema in Nootka Court, didn't open its doors on schedule Thursday.

The cinema's management spokesman explained there had been "a bit of a problem" over building permits, but said the difficulties should be resolved in "a couple of days."

City engineer James Garnett said a number of relatively minor details in the structure and its equipment had not been completed to the satisfaction of the building, electrical and fire inspectors, and until they had been, the cinema could not open.

"We're not trying to harass anyone, but this is a public building and we have to be satisfied there is no danger to life or limb," he added.

Magazinesellers say public not complaining

A official of Maclean-Hunter Ltd. this week denied charges by Consumer Services Minister Phyllis Young that the magazine firm's subscription methods were "rotten" and "questionable."

Toronto-based national circulation manager Howard Adams said the firm hasn't "had a serious complaint from anyone in B.C. for more than nine months."

He was referring to Young's statement in the legislature that "the Better Business Bureau has named Maclean-Hunter as the top violator in the field of subscription sales."

"The only other centre," said Adams, "where we've had some trouble in recent years was in Winnipeg and our subscription selling techniques are fairly uniform across the country. I'd like to know the sources of Miss Young's information."

He said the agencies his company sets up in various communities teach the same basic sales technique and in most cases unsatisfied customer have little trouble getting refunds.

"Of course, we have no control over individual salesmen who decide to make their own pitches but we do not authorize anyone to make claims about working for scholarships or that sort of thing," he added.

Young told the legislature her department is attempting to get the company to improve its subscription sales techniques.

The company, she said, would "bring carloads of people into a district" selling subscriptions on a door-to-door basis, using every gimmick in the book. "As I said, they bring out good magazines, but methods used in selling them are rotten."

Emergency at Jubilee Red flag out

Royal Jubilee Hospital has put out an urgent call for regional politicians to make up their minds about how they intend to upgrade the hospital's "grossly inadequate" facilities.

Jubilee executive director Dr. A. C. Pickles told The Express that the hospital is down to its "last few square feet" of usable space with every service "extended to the limit."

"We can't squeeze any more out of the facilities we have," said Dr. Pickles who noted that the hospital was filled to capacity much of the time and patients were having to wait an average of three to four months for surgery.

Main complaint of the Jubilee is that while the Capital Region Hospital Board approved the idea of a masterplan for improvements to the hospital more than three years ago, regional politicians have so far failed to put their muscle and money behind the scheme.

It is now nearly a year since taxpayers voted approval of regional hospital spending of $22 1/2 million in a referendum March 31, 1973, and Jubilee administrators are impatient with the board's lack of decision over how the money will be spent.

Dr. Pickles was interviewed after his hospital's annual general meeting held earlier this week at the Nurses' Residence on Richmond.

One special area of concern to Pickles was the continued expansion of the hospital's open heart surgical unit.

So far the unit has successfully operated on more than 80 heart patients at a current rate of three patients a week. It may be necessary to step up the weekly rate to eight by 1975 which will put further strain on existing surgical facilities.

Perennial color-riot transforms the city

It doesn't matter where you transplant them, Greater Victoria's green-thumbers break loose in springtime and bring out a profusion of color even on the balconies of the city's tallest highrises.

As many longtime residents sell their family homes and go to live in an apartment, their urge to garden does not leave them. They compromise by scaling down the size of their working area and become more discriminating in the selection of flowering plants and shrubs.

Saanich nurseryman Tony Wallner said the trend toward buying plants and shrubs that can be grown in containers became noticeable "about four years ago."

The increases in container gardening is in obvious evidence on any Victoria street where there are apartments, he said.

"The balconies will soon be loaded with early blooming spring flowers, later they will be replaced with those that bloom in summer."

Colwood nurseryman Bill Bayley agrees that flowers which can be grown in baskets, tubs and other containers are in high demand by apartment dwellers.

He also points out that miniature shrubs and slow-growing evergreens are popular with gardeners who have to work in limited space.

Many indoor gardeners have turned to the more exotic type of house plants, or are trying to raise citrus trees such as the lemon. Others have herb gardens which take up little space.

Gardening is the hangup of Victorians and no matter how small the amount of earth, you can bet some green-thumb artist will plant a seed in it.

Builders ask B.C. to ease controls

PRINCE GEORGE — Home builders in the province have called on the government to ease land development controls to curb last year's 32 per cent escalation in housing prices.

In a brief to Premier Barrett, the B.C. council of the Housing and Urban Development Association of Canada (HUDAC) suggests adoption of a land "spending" policy rather than a land "banking" policy.

"Much land is being held up for farm freeze studies," says the organization, representing 85 per cent of homebuilders in the province.

"In addition, developers, realtors, builders and government are competing for the small amount of serviceable land left, thus driving prices out of sight."

Recommendations include:

—A quicker approval process which will ultimately result in production of quality shelter for all income groups;

—Government removal of "unreasonable" servicing costs applied by municipalities to residential property;

—Implementation of a common standard for subdivision development throughout the province;

—A 90-day limit for processing rezoning applications at municipal and regional levels;

—Full disclosure of all serviceable land available by municipalities in the province;

—Government removal of zoning control powers from municipalities "which will not co-operate in this time of crisis."

School staff needed

British Columbia will need 2,600 additional teachers to carry out its program to decrease class sizes throughout the province, a Social Credit member told the legislature this week.

Harvey Schroeder (Chilliwack) said 1,000 new teachers will be needed next September and 1,600 more in the following two years to implement the government's promise to reduce average classroom size by 1.5 pupils a year for three years.

"I commend you, it is a positive goal," said Schroeder, but he said he doubted the province would find it easy to hire the number of teachers necessary.

In a two-hour speech, Schroeder found little else to praise in the work of Education Minister Eileen Daly.

"This minister is not sure what way to go and we have no leadership in the department of education," he said, adding that people in B.C. are losing confidence in her performance.

Among other criticisms, Schroeder condemned the government for abolishing corporal punishment and said more should be done for children "who are handicapped on the positive side of the ledger" and because of their brilliance find school boring.

He also urged the government to consider financial support for independent schools.

Hydro workers back on job

QUEBEC CITY — A walkout by 900 men on the James Bay hydro project in northern Quebec has ended with all returning to work. The disruption at the damsite came earlier in the week over hiring policies. The men went back just as provincial police were sending in riot forces.

Bridge closing

Johnson Street bridge will be closed Sunday from 8:30 a.m. to noon.

The traffic engineering department said repair work will be done to the bridge.

Today he has a job. Tomorrow...?

New mines should be under development to ensure employment for British Columbia's thousands of skilled miners.

Yet, under Bill 31, fewer jobs in the mineral industry will be available. Fewer still will be available to tens of thousands in service and supply industries.

Bill 31, the Mineral Royalties Act, has already been given first reading in the Provincial Legislature — but it's not too late to ask for a strong second look at this proposed legislation. This will only come about if you and many other concerned citizens take the trouble to write your MLA immediately and ask for the repeal or revision of the bill. Why should you bother? Because Bill 31, in its present form, would almost certainly spell the decline of our second biggest industry ... and this decline would mean thousands of lost jobs, not only in mining but in the dozens of "support" industries which derive much of their business from mining ... throughout the province, all of us would feel the "pinch" as one of our great basic industries ceased to be a strong economic force.

There are two specific aspects of Bill 31 which threaten the decline of mining in British Columbia. These are:

1 Discretionary Power of the Minister to set basic mineral values.

Under Bill 31 mining royalties will be levied against the "basic value" of various minerals ... but only the Minister of Mines has the power to establish these "basic values." Because these values would be set "from time to time" at the Minister's discretion, there will be no way for mining companies to accurately forecast the amount of royalties and taxation they will face. Without this information, mine developers will be unable to determine whether or not a proposed new mine will be economic.

Result: a dramatic decline in new mine development.

2 The Super Royalty.

Mining and income taxes of almost 50% of net earnings are already levied against B.C. Mines by senior governments. Now, the provincial government proposes royalties of 5% on net sales commencing in 1975 (2.5% this year). In addition, a super royalty will be calculated on the price of all metal production. When prices are 20% above the basic value of mineral production further increases will be assessed a royalty of 50%. The Bill makes no allowance for any costs of production, let alone provision for inflation, thus taking excessive advantage of a mine's good years — the years when funds are accumulated for new exploration and — hopefully — new mines and jobs.

Result: When business has no prospects for a reasonable return on investment, it goes elsewhere.

Faced with these punitive royalties mining companies will simply direct their exploration dollars elsewhere. And that means fewer mines in future, fewer jobs, smaller payrolls, less purchasing of goods and services by mining companies ... and, reduced prosperity for every British Columbian.

Right now, the livelihood of nearly 100,000 citizens and their families is affected by the mining industry. It can mean even more in the future, ... but not if the full force of Bill 31 is put into effect.

If you care about the future of this province, take the trouble to raise your voice in support of an industry British Columbia truly needs. Your opinion does matter ... and it's still not too late to speak out. Write your MLA or the Premier today, in care of the Parliament Buildings, Victoria, B.C. — and ask him to call for the repeal of Bill 31.
